

Accessions

BL910. D35

Shelf No.

2520.9

FROM THE

Phillips Fund.

Added _____

THE
MYTHOLOGY AND RITES

OF THE

British Druids,

ASCERTAINED BY

NATIONAL DOCUMENTS;

AND COMPARED WITH THE

GENERAL TRADITIONS AND CUSTOMS OF HEATHENISM, AS ILLUSTRATED BY THE MOST EMINENT ANTIQUARIES OF OUR AGE.

WITH AN

APPENDIX,

CONTAINING

ANCIENT POEMS AND EXTRACTS,

WITH SOME

REMARKS ON ANCIENT BRITISH COINS.

AD QUE NOSCENDA ITER INGRES, TRANSMITTERE MARE SOLEMUS, EA
SUB OCULIS POSITA NEGLIGIMUS,—PLIN. L. VIII. Ep. 20.

By EDWARD DAVIES,

RECTOR OF BISHOPTON, IN THE COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN, AND AUTHOR OF CELTIC RESEARCHES.

London.

PRINTED FOR J. BOOTH, DUKE-STREET, PORTLAND-PLACE.

1809.

25209
6431

BL910.D35

Rev.

7835

Aug 11, 1954

YRABEIL OLBUN

ENT 70

NOT 208 70 YTO

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,
RICHARD, LORD BISHOP OF LANDAFF.

MY LORD,

THE noble frankness with which your Lordship grants a favour, encourages me to hope, that you will pardon the liberty I now take, in prefixing your name to an Essay upon the Mythology and Rites of the Heathen Britons.

It is with diffidence I lay this subject before a man of your Lordship's distinguished character; whether in reference to private worth, to reputation in the world of letters, to rank in society, or to that zeal and ability which you have so successfully displayed in the defence of our holy religion.

But whatever the merits of this Work may be, I eagerly embrace the opportunity which it affords me, of acknowledging a debt of gratitude, in the audience of the Public.

When MR. HARDINGE, amongst his other acts of generosity, which it is impossible for me to enumerate or to forget, pointed me out to your Lordship's notice, under the character of his friend, it was your good pleasure to place me in a respectable station in the Church, and thus confer upon me the comfort of independence.

Your Lordship's manner of bestowing a benefit, is a great addition to its value; and whilst I am offering my humble tribute of thanks, it emboldens me to aspire to the preservation of your good opinion.

I have the honour to remain,

Your Lordship's much obliged and devoted humble servant,

E. DAVIES.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2011 with funding from Boston Public Library

PREFACE.

THE first section of the ensuing Essay, effects the principal objects of a Preface; yet the Author has not the confidence to intrude upon his Reader, without premising a few pages, to bespeak his attention, and conciliate his esteem—without offering some apology for the nature of his subject, and the manner in which it has been treated.

To some persons, the utility of such a work may not be obvious. It may be asked—What interest has the present age, in a view of the errors and prejudices of the Pagan Britons?

To obviate this, and similar inquiries, I would suggest the reflection, that the history of mankind is, in a great measure, the history of errors and prejudices—that the superstition we have now to contemplate, however absurd in itself, affected the general tone of thinking in several districts of Britain—that its influence continued to recent times, and has scarcely vanished at the present day. To an age of general inquiry, an investigation of the form and principles of this superstition, must surely be a subject of interest.

In our times, a spirit of research, which few are so unjust as to impute to idle curiosity, embraces all the regions of the known world: and is our own country the only spot that must be deemed unworthy of our attention?

Ancient and authentic documents, of the opinions and customs of the old Britons, have been preserved, though long concealed by the shades of a difficult and obsolete language. And can a dispassionate examination of their contents, which are totally unknown to the Public, be deemed a subject of no interest or utility?

These documents are found, upon investigation, to develop a system of religion, which, for many ages, influenced the affairs of the human race, not only in these islands, but also in the adjacent regions of Europe: and are we not to inquire in what this religion consisted, and what hold it took of the mind of man? Or is it an useless task, to expose the origin of some absurd customs and prejudices, which are still cherished in certain corners of our land? But it will be said—The state of society amongst the ancient Britons was rude and unpolished; and their very religion opposed the progress of science and of letters.

Be this admitted: yet the Britons, with all their barbarism and absurdities, constituted a link in the great chain of history. In addition to this, their affairs derive some importance from their rank amongst our own progenitors, their connection with our native country, and the remains of their monuments, which still appear in our fields. A prospect of the few advantages which they enjoyed, may furnish no unpleasant subject of comparison with our own times. A candid exposure of that mass of error under which they groaned, may inspire us with more lively gratitude for the knowledge of the true religion, and, perhaps, suggest a seasonable caution against the indulgence of vain speculation upon sacred subjects—a weakness to which the human mind is prone in every age.

Upon the whole, then, I humbly conceive, that an examination of our national reliques has been hitherto a desideratum in British literature; that the individual who has now attempted to draw them out of obscurity, is entitled to the candid attention of the Public; and that the time of the Reader, who may honour this volume with a candid perusal, will not have been spent in vain.

BUT of the manner in which this examination is conducted in the following Essay, I must speak with less confidence. As far as I know my own heart, truth, without favour or prejudice to the memory of our misguided ancestors, has been my object. Touching the light in which I view their ancient superstition, I must confess that I have not been the first in representing the druidical, as having had some connection with the patriarchal religion; but I know of no work already before the Public, which has unravelled the very slender threads by which that connection was maintained.

This difficult task I have attempted, by the aid of those Bards who were professed votaries of Druidism; and the undertaking was greatly facilitated by the labours of Mr. Bryant, which present a master-key to the mythology of the ancient world. That I cannot give my assent to the whole of this great man's opinion, has been already acknowledged: * but whilst I allow myself to object against the slipper, I contemplate the masterly outlines of the statue, with respect and admiration.

It is to be regretted, that this eminent mythologist was wholly unacquainted with the written documents of Druidism, preserved in this country. Had they been open to his investigation, he would have exhibited them to peculiar advantage, and he would have found them as strong in support of his general principles, as any remains of antiquity whatsoever.

I must here endeavour to obviate another objection. In the British poems, which treat of heathenish superstition, a sentence is often inserted, containing the name of Christ, or some allusion to his religion, and having no connection with the matter which precedes or follows. Some of these sentences I have omitted, for obvious reasons. I have been not a little puzzled to account for their admission into the text: but as all our remaining poems were composed or altered, subsequent to the first introduction of Christianity, it is probable that St. Augustin supplies us with the true reason of such admixture.

* Celt. Res. p. 115.

“ Qui seducunt per ligaturas, per præcantationes, per machinamenta inimici, inserunt præcantationibus suis nomen Christi: quia jam non possunt seducere Christianos, ut dent venenum, addunt mellis aliquantum, ut per id quod dulce est, lateat quod amarum est, et bibatur ad perniciem.”*

In the selection of matter, the author has endeavoured to observe a medium, between that fastidious abruptness, which leaves many of the great outlines of a subject unmarked, and a minute prolixity, which scrutinizes every obscure corner of heathen abomination.

To future inquiry he leaves an open field, where some more handfuls may be gleaned, and approaches the reader with a consciousness, that as far as he has proceeded, his steps have been guided by integrity.

The subject of this volume having an intimate connection with that of the Celtic Researches, a short Index of that book is introduced. It is also to be had separate, and respectfully offered to my Subscribers, as a small tribute of gratitude for their liberal support, and as an acknowledgement of the favourable opinion with which I have been honoured, by some of the most distinguished characters, in that illustrious catalogue—men whose learning and talents are acknowledged, and whose judgment will be respected.

* Aug. Tract. 7. in Joan. T. IX. p. 27.

As to the animadversions of professed critics, some of them were avowedly hostile. But their elaborate prolixity, which is no mark of contempt, affords some consolation for the malignity of their efforts. The work, and the strictures which it occasioned, are before the Public, which is of no party. To this upright and competent judge I appeal, with humble submission, neither vainly pleading an immunity from just censure, nor dreading the effects of those sarcasms, which arose from gross misrepresentation of my opinions, and perversion of my principles.

Upon one solitary occasion, I must beg leave to defend my own cause. The passage which I am about to quote, is not singled out as unworthy of the learning or candour of its author, but as involving a point, in which the Public may want an interpreter. It also affords me an opportunity of stating my reasons, for understanding the works of Taliesin somewhat differently from the Critical Reviewer.

“ Let us now,” says the critic, “ compare this “ description of the Aborigines of Britain with that “ of Taliesin, a name before which every Welshman “ must bow; who was himself a Bard, perhaps a “ Druid, but converted from his Druidical idolatry
 “ to Christianity, and who is reported to have flourished
 “ in the sixth century of the Christian æra;
 “ consequently, about six hundred years before these “ Triads were ever attempted to be collected.* The “ poem we cite from is denominated the Pacification
 “ of Lludd.”

The critic then gives his original, with the following translation :

“ A numerous race, and fierce, as fame reports them,
 “ Were thy first colonists, Britain, chief of isles :

* I am totally at a loss to conjecture upon what ground this assertion stands. I had mentioned some copyists of the Triads in the twelfth century; but I never supposed them to have been the original collectors.

“ Natives of a country in Asia, and of the region of Gafis;
 “ A people said to have been skilful; but the district is “ unknown,
 “ That was mother to this progeny, these warlike adven“ turers on the sea.
 “ Clad in their long dress, who could equal them?
 “ Celebrated is their skill: they were the dread
 “ Of Europe.”

“ Here,” adds the triumphant critic, “ instead of “ being men of quiet dispositions, and abhorrent of “ war, they are expressly declared to have been “ fierce and warlike adventurers—unequalled, and
 “ the dread of Europe: instead of coming from “ Constantinople, and crossing the German haze, or “ ocean, they are said to have wandered from the “ region of Gafis, in Asia. Is it possible to imagine
 “ a stronger contrast?”— (Vide Critical Review, August, 1804, p. 374.)

The contrast, as here drawn, is strong enough: but I must take the liberty to hint, that the critic, or his prompter, has perverted the whole of this vaunted passage, in consequence of having mistaken the meaning of a single word—Dygorescynan, which he renders were the first colonists, simply implies, will again invade, or, according to Mr. Owen, will subjugate, or overcome: so that the Bard does not describe the Aborigines of Britain, but a hostile race, who invaded or subdued the country.

The title of the poem, Pacification of Lludd, and a line, which informs us it was the pacification of Lludd and Llefelis, may furnish a clue to the æra of these invaders. Lludd and Llefelis are represented, by the Welsh chronicles, as brothers of Cassivellaunus, who fought with Cæsar, though it is pretty clear that, in simple fact, they were no other than those princes of the Trinobantes, whom the Roman historian mentions by the names of Imanuentius and Mandubrasius. Hence it appears, that these first colonists of Britain arrived in the age of Julius Cæsar.*

Let us now try to identify this warlike race. In the passage quoted by the critic, they are said to have sprung from a country in Asia, and the region of Gafis, or rather Gafys. Whoever has Welsh enough to translate Taliesin, must be fully aware, that it is the genius of that language to change c into g, and p into f. Let us then replace the original letters, and we shall have the region of Capys, a Trojan prince, who was the father of Anchises, and reputed ancestor of the Romans. Hence it may be conjectured, that these were the very people whom the Bard describes as having invaded Britain, in the time of Lludd and Llefelis; that is, in the age of Julius Cæsar.

But Critics must not be supposed to write at random, without some knowledge of their subject. As they claim respect from the Public, they must respect their own characters. And as our author has positively pronounced his warlike race the first colonists of Britain, it may be presumed, that his assertion has some adequate support in other parts of the poem. In order to determine this point, I shall exhibit the whole, for it is not long, with a translation as close and as faithful; to say the least of it, as that which we have in the preceding critique.

YMARWAR LLUDD.—Bychan:

Yn enw Duw Trindawd, cardawd cyfrwys!
 Llwyth lliaws, anuaws eu henwerys,
 Dygorescynnau Prydain, prif fan ynys;
 Gwyr gwlad yr Asia, a gwlad Gafys;

* The romantic chronicles of Archdeacon Walter, and Geoffry of Monmouth, and, after them, some late annotators on the Triads, say, that the Coranied, a Belgic tribe, arrived in the age of Lludd. This is evidently erroneous. The reader will see presently, that the Bard means the Romans, and no other people.

Pobl pwyllad enwir: eu tir ni wys
 Famen: gorwyreis herwydd maris.
 Amlaes eu peisseu; pwy ei hefelis?
 A phwyllad dyvynner, ober efnis,
 Europin, Arafin, Arafanis.
 Cristiawn difryt, diryd dilis,
 Cyn ymarwar Lludd a Llefelis.
 Dysgogettawr perchen y Wen Ynys,
 Rac pennaeth o Ryfein, cein ei echrys.
 Nid rys, nid cyfrwys, Ri: rwyf ei araith
 (A rywelei a ryweleis o anghyfieith)
 Dullator pedrygwern, llugyrn ymdaith,
 Rac Rhyuonig cynran baran goddeith.
 Rytalas mab Grat, rwyf ei areith.
 Cymry yn danhual: rhyvel ar geith.
 Pryderaf, pwyllaf pwy y hymdeith—
 Brythonig yniwis rydderchefis.

PACIFICATION OF LLUDD—Little song.

In the name of the God Trinity,* exhibit thy charity!
 A numerous race, of ungentle manners,
 Repeat their invasion of Britain, chief of isles:†
 Men from a country in Asia, and the region of Capys;‡
 A people of iniquitous design: the land is not known
 That was their mother.§ They made a devious course by sea.
 In their flowing garments,|| who can equal them?
 With design are they called in,¶ with their short spears,
 those foes

* The Bard addresses himself to a Christian.

† The subject of the poem is Cæsar's second invasion. The particle dy, in composition, conveys the sense of iteration.

‡ The district of Troy, whence the Romans deduced their origin.

§ When the oracle commanded Æneas and his company—

Dardanidæ duri, quæ vos a stirpe parentum

Prima tulit tellus, eadem vos ubere læto

Accipiet reduces; antiquam exquirite Matrem—

Virg. Æn. III. V. 93.

We are informed, that they knew not where to find this parent region, and consequently wandered through various seas in search of it. To this tale the Bard evidently alludes.

|| The Roman toga, or gown.

¶ We learn from Cæsar, as well as from the British Triads and chronicles, that the Romans were invited into this island by the princes of the Trinobantes, who were at war with Cassivellaunus.

 Such was the formidable pilum, as appears from a variety of Roman coins and sculptures.

Of the Europeans, the Aramites, and Armenians.*
 O thoughtless Christian, there was oppressive toil,
 Before the pacification of Lludd and Llefelis,†
 The proprietor of the fair island‡ is ronsed
 Against the Roman leader, splendid and terrible.
 The King§ is not ensnared, as inexpert: he directs with his speech
 (Having seen all the foreigners that were to be seen),
 That the quadrangular swamp|| should be set in order, by wayfaring torches,
 Against the arrogant leader, in whose presence there was a spreading flame.¶
 The son of Graid, with his voice, directs the retaliation.
 The Cymry burst into a flame—there is war upon the slaves.††
 With deliberate thought will I declare the stroke that made them decamp.
It was the great exaltation of British energy.‡‡

* The Romans had carried their arms, not only over the best part of Europe, but also into Aram, or Syria and Armenia, before they invaded Britain.

† These reputed brothers of Cassivellaunus, were the princes of the Trinobantes, who deserted the general cause of their country, and sent ambassadors to Julius Cæsar.

‡ The reader will see hereafter, that the ancient Bards conferred this title upon the solar divinity, and his chief minister.

§ That is Cassivellaunus, whose abilities and prudence are acknowledged by the Roman commander.

|| The fortress or town of Cassivellaunus, Silvis paludibusque munitum. De Bell. Gall. L. V. c. 21.

¶ Relinquebatur ut neque longius ab agmine legionum discedi Cæsar pateretur, et tantum in agris vastandis, incendiisque faciendis, hostibus noceretur. Ib. c. 19.

 Grad, or Graid, the sun.—Cassivellaunus is called the son of Beli, which is another name of that deified luminary.

†† Those British tribes who voluntarily submitted to the Romans (see Cæsar, Ib. c. 20, 21), and on whom Cassivellaunus retaliated, after Cæsar's departure.

‡‡ The Bard, in a strain of venial patriotism, ascribes the departure of Cæsar and the Romans to the prowess of his countrymen. Other Bards have dropped pretty strong hints to the same purpose. Lucan says—

Territa quæsitis ostendit terga Britannis.

And Pope, with less asperity—

Ask why, from Britain Cæsar would retreat?
 Cæsar himself might whisper—I was beat.

By this time, I trust, I have made a convert of the critic. He will agree with me in thinking, that this little poem relates only to the invasion of Britain by Julius Cæsar; and that it contains not the most distant hint of its first colonists. The strong contrast has changed its position: but I abstain from farther remarks.

Criticism may be useful to the author who undergoes its chastisement, as well as to the Public. To the censor whose representation is just, whose reproof is liberal, who so far respects himself, as to preserve the character of a scholar and a gentleman, I shall attend with due regard. But if any professed judge of books can descend so low, as wilfully to pervert my words and meaning, to twist them into absurdity, and extract silly witticisms from his own conceits, I must be allowed to consider his strictures as foreign to myself and my work, and as little calculated to influence those readers whom I wish to engage.

THE
CONTENTS.

SECTION I.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS ON THE WRITTEN MONUMENTS OF THE EARLY BRITONS—THEIR AUTHENTICITY PROVED, BY THE TEST OF CLASSICAL ANTIQUITY - - - - - Page 1—84

SECTION II.

GENERAL VIEW OF DRUIDICAL THEOLOGY—CHARACTER AND RITES OF HU, THE HELIO-ARKITE GOD—THE BACCHUS OF THE HEATHEN BRITONS, Page 85—182

SECTION III.

THE CHARACTER, CONNEXIONS, AND MYSTICAL RITES OF KED, OR CERIDWEN, THE ARKITE GODDESS OF THE DRUIDS—HER IDENTITY WITH THE CERES OF ANTIQUITY, - - - - - Page 183—290

SECTION IV.

THE DESIGN OF THE CIRCULAR TEMPLES AND CROMLECHS OF THE DRUIDS—ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS RELATIVE TO THE CELEBRATED STRUCTURE OF STONEHENGE, - - - - - Page 291—410

(THE GODODIN, Page 326—383.)

SECTION V.

SECTION V.

TRADITIONS RELATING TO THE PROGRESS, REVOLUTIONS, AND SUPPRESSION OF THE BRITISH SUPERSTITION, - - - - - Page 411—500

APPENDIX, CONSISTING OF ANCIENT POEMS AND EXTRACTS, - - - - - Page 501—588

REMARKS UPON ANCIENT BRITISH COINS, Page 589—624

INDEX, - - - - - Page 625—642

ERRATA, - - - - - Page 642

THE
MYTHOLOGY AND RITES

OF THE

British Druids.

SECTION I.

Preliminary Observations on the written Monuments of the early Britons. Their Authenticity proved, by the Test of classical Antiquity.

IN a retrospect of the state of society, which formerly prevailed in our country, the contemplative mind is not more agreeably, than usefully employed. Hence many writers, of distinguished eminence, have undertaken to elucidate the modes of thinking, and the customs of the early Britons, together with their religious opinions and superstitious rites. Upon this subject, many notices are scattered amongst the remains of Greek and Roman learning. These have been collected with diligence, arranged and appreciated with ingenuity. But here the research of our antiquaries has been checked, by the compass of their own studies, rather than by the defect of other existing monuments: whereas, upon a topic that claims investigation, every pertinent document ought to be considered; and especially, those documents which lead to a more intimate knowledge of the matter in hand.

What has hitherto remained undone, I have already hinted, in a volume which I lately published, under the most respectable and liberal patronage. I there stated, that certain ancient writings, which are preserved in the Welsh language, contain many new and curious particulars relative to the ancient religion and customs of Britain; and that, in this point of view, they would reward the research of the temperate and unprejudiced antiquary.

At that time, I had no thoughts of pursuing the investigation; but I have since taken up a fresh resolution, and it is the business of the present Essay to evince the truth of my assertion.

To this end, I shall employ an introductory section, in pointing out the particular writings of the Britons, upon which I ground my opinion; in shewing that those writings have been regarded as druidical; and in ascertaining, by historical tests, the authenticity of their pretensions.*

The British documents, to which I principally refer, are the poems of Taliesin, Aneurin, and Merddin the Caledonian, Bards who lived in the sixth century of the Christian

* In this Section, I must also take notice of the objections of some of my own countrymen, who, since the publication of the Celtic Researches, have industriously spread a report, that I do not produce the genuine traditions of the Welsh Bards. However little concern I might feel, for the mere accident of thinking differently from these men, yet, as I have made my opinion public, I deem it a duty which I owe to my own character, as well as to the generous patrons of my book, to shew, that I am competent to judge of the genuine remains of the Welsh; and that my representations of them have been fairly made, and from the best authorities that can be produced.

My own vindication will call for a few remarks, upon the grounds of the adverse opinion; but I hope to vindicate myself with temper.

æra. With these works, my acquaintance is not recent. I have possessed a good collated copy of them, in MS. since the year 1792. I have also the London edition of the same works, which appeared in the first volume of the Myvyrian Archaeology of Wales, in 1801.

To the primitive Bards, I add the historical and mythological notices, called Triads, published in the second volume of the same work; and though their compilers are not known, I shall use them freely, as far as I find their authority supported by general tradition, ancient manuscripts, and internal evidence.

Modern criticism having suggested some doubts as to the genuineness of the works ascribed to our ancient Bards, it may be expected, that I should offer something in their defence upon this score. But from the greatest part of this task I may fairly excuse myself, by a general reference to the Vindication, lately published by the learned and accurate Mr. Turner, who, in answer to all their adversaries, has stated, and fully substantiated the following proposition; namely,

“ That there are poems, now existing in the Welsh, or ancient British language, which were written by Aneurin, Taliesin, Llywarch Hên, and Merddin, who flourished between the years 500 and 600.”

This subject, the able advocate of our Bards has not handled slightly, or superficially. He carries them through every question of external and internal evidence, refutes all the main objections which have been urged against the works of the Bards, and concludes his Vindication by shewing, that there is nothing extraordinary in the fact, which his Essay is directed to substantiate; that these poems are attested by an unvaried stream of national belief; and that any suspicion about them has been of recent origin.*

The author of the Anglo-Saxon history, being interested only in the credit of the historical poems of these Bards, has directed his Vindication, principally, to the support of their cause; but as my subject leads me, more immediately, to examine certain pieces of another kind, which, from their mythological and mysterious allusions, have obtained the general appellation of mystical poems, candour requires, that I should state this gentleman's opinion of the latter, and plead something in their defence, where he seems to have deserted them.

Of these mystical pieces, Mr. Turner thus declares his sentiments.—“Some (of Taliesin's poems) are unintelligible, “because full of Bardic, or Druidical allusions.” †

And again: “Of Taliesin's poetry, we may say, in general, that his historical pieces are valuable; his others “are obscure: but, as they contain much old mythology, “and Bardic imagery, they are worth attention, because “some parts may be illustrated, and made intelligible.” ‡

I have quoted these passages, at length, in order to shew my reader, that the author's censure is not directed against the pretensions of these poems to genuineness, or authenticity, but merely, against that degree of obscurity which they must, necessarily, present to every man who has not studied their subjects. And Mr. Turner's declared opinion, that they are worth attention, as containing much old mythology, certainly supposes, that they are ancient and authentic; I mean so far authentic, as to be real documents of British mythology.

* Vindication of the Genuineness of the Ancient British Bards. 8vo. London, 1803. See p. 16 to 20.

† Ibid. p. 14.

‡ Ibid. p. 250.

That a critic, so candid, and so well informed, should have pronounced these poems, which peculiarly treat of Druidism, absolutely unintelligible; and especially, as he acknowledges the assistance of Mr. Owen and Mr. Williams, men who claim an exclusive acquaintance with the whole system of Bardic lore, may seem rather extraordinary: but the wonder will cease, when we shall have seen, that the information of these ingenious writers is drawn from another source; from a document which will appear to be, in many respects, irreconcilable with the works of the ancient Bards, or with the authority of the classical page.

Mr. Turner's censure, as we have seen, regards only the obscurity of the mystical poems: but as it is possible, that the candid zeal of criticism may mistake obscure, for spurious, it may be proper to produce some farther evidence in their favour. And here I may remark, that Mr. Turner was the first critic, who made a public distinction between the credit of the mystical, and the historical poems. The external evidence, in favour of both, is just the same. They are preserved in the same manuscripts; and an unvaried stream of national belief ascribes them, without distinction, to the authors whose names they bear.

Here I might rest the cause of these old poems, till they prove their own authenticity, by internal evidence, in the course of my Essay; did I not deem it requisite, to adduce some testimonies of the real existence of Druidism, amongst the Welsh, in the times of the native princes. These testimonies are collected from a series of Bards, who wrote in succession, from before the twelfth, to the middle of the fourteenth century. The genuineness of their works has never been disputed; and they, pointedly, allude to the mystical strains of Taliesin, and establish their credit, as derived from the source of Druidism.

MEUGANT, a Bard who lived in the seventh century, writes thus.

Cred i Dduw nad Derwyddon darogant Pan torrer Dîn Brëon baint.*

“ Trust in God, that those are no Druids, who prophesy,
“ that the privilege of Dîn Brëon will be violated.”

Dîn Brëon, the Hill of Legislature, was the sacred mount, where the Bards, the ancient judges of the land, assembled, to decide causes. The author here alludes to certain predictions, that the privilege of this court would be violated; but, at the same time, suggests a hope, that the prophets were not real Druids, and, consequently, that their forebodings might never be accomplished. This, surely, supposes, that Druidical predictions were known, in the days of Meugant, and that they were regarded as oracles of truth.

* W. Archaiol. p. 161.

GOLYDDAN, a Bard of the same century, asserts the existence of Druidical prophecies, and considers the destiny of Britain, as absolutely involved in their sentence.

Dysgogan Derwyddon maint a dderyydd :
 O Vynaw hyd Lydaw yn eu llaw a vydd :
 O Ddyved hyd Ddanet huz biduwydd, &c.*

“ Druids vaticinate—a multitude shall arrive: from Me“ nevia to Armorica shall be in their hand: from Dernetia
 “ to Thanet shall they possess.”

Such passages bear testimony to the existence of certain, pretended, vaticinations, which were expressly ascribed to the Druids; and which the Britons, of the seventh century, contemplated with respect. It is also worthy of note, that Golyddan enrols Merddin the Caledonian in the list of his infallible Druids.

Dysgogan Merddin—cyverydd hyn!

“ It is Merddin who predicts—this will come to pass!”

Let us now hear the acknowledgment of a Bard, who was less favourable to the Druidical strain; or who, at least, did not think it meet to be employed in a Christian’s address to his Creator.

CUHELYN wrote, according to the table of the Welsh Archaiology, in the latter part of the eighth century.† A

* W. Archaiol. p. 158.

† I think Mr. Owen has, more accurately, ascribed this work to Cuhelyn ab Caw, a Bard of the sixth century.

religious ode, which bears the name of this Bard, has the following passage:

Deus Rhëen rhymavy Awen.

Amen, fiat!

Fynedig wawd frwythlawn draethawd,

Rymibyddad.

Herwydd urdden awdyl Keridwen,

Ogyrwen amhad,

Amhad anaw areith awyrllaw

Y Caw ceiniad,

Cuhelyn Bardd Cymraeg hardd

Cyd wrthodiad

Certh cymnwynas, Ked cyweithas,

Ni vaintimad.

Cathyl cyvystrawd cyvan volawd,

Clutawd attad.

“ God the Creator! Inspire my genius! Amen—be it “ done! A prosperous song of praise, a fruitful discourse, “ may I obtain. For the venerated song of Ceridwen, the “ Goddess of various seeds, of various seeds of Genius, the “ eloquence of the airy hand of the chaunter of Caw, Cu-“ helyn, the elegant Welsh Bard would utterly reject.
 “ The awful enjoyment of the society of Kêd could not be “ maintained. A song of direct course, of unmixed praise, “ has been offered to thee.”*

* There is another poem of Cuhelyn, which details some curious particulars of Bardic lore. It is introduced in the fourth section of this Essay.

The songs of Ceridwen—of the chaunters of Caw, and of the society of Kéd, as I shall make appear, are precisely the mystical strains ascribed to Taliesin, and the lore of the British Druids. And the Bard, by making a merit of not imitating this kind of poetry, in his address to the Creator, furnishes an undeniable evidence, that such composition was known in his time; that it was in high esteem amongst his countrymen; and that he deemed it unsuitable to the purity of Christian devotion.

Thus we find, that the mystic lore of the Druids, and those songs, which are full of their old mythology, were extant, and in repute, during the ages immediately subsequent to the times of Aneurin, Taliesin, and Merd-din. Let us examine whether they were forgotten, in the ages of the more recent Welsh Princes.

The works of several Bards, who flourished in Wales during the interval, from the beginning of the twelfth, to the close of the fourteenth century, have been well preserved. They are now printed in the first volume of the Welsh Archaology.

So far was Druidism from being either forgotten or neglected in this period, that one of the most curious subjects of observation, which present themselves upon the perusal of these works, is the constant allusion to certain ancient and genuine remains of the Druids, which had descended to the times of the respective authors. The principals amongst the Bards of these ages, appear very anxious to distinguish themselves from mere poets. They assert their own pretensions to the honour of the Druidical character, upon the plea of an accurate institution into the mysteries, and discipline, of those ancient sages; or upon a direct descent from their venerated blood. The reader shall have an opportunity of judging for himself.

MEILYR, a distinguished Bard, who flourished between the years 1120 and 1160, composed an elegy upon the death of two princes of his country, the first line of which runs thus.

Gwolychav i'm Rhëen, Rex Awyr.*

“ I will address myself to my sovereign, the King of the “ Air.”

This is an evident imitation of the first line of the Chair of Ceridwen—Rhëen rym Awyr †—“ O Sovereign of the “ power of the Air.” This piece, therefore, which is one of the principal of Taliesin's mystical poems, was known to Meilyr the Bard.

GWALCHMAI, the son of Meilyr, wrote between the years 1150 and 1190.

In a poem, entitled Gorhofedd, or The Boast, he thus imitates the Gorwynion, a poem ascribed to Llywarch Hên, upon the subject of the mystical sprigs.

Gorwyn blaen avall, bloden vagwy,
Balch caen coed—
Bryd pawb parth yd garwy. ‡

* W. Archaiol. p. 192.

† Ibid. p. 66.

‡ Ibid. p. 193.

“ The point of the apple tree, supporting blossoms,
 “ proud covering of the wood, declares—Every one’s desire
 “ tends to the place of his affections.”

In his elegy upon the death of Madawc, Prince of Powys, the same Bard exclaims,

Och Duw na dodyw
 Dydd brawd, can deryw
 Derwyddon weini nad—Diwreiddiws Pywys peleidriad—rhyvel!*

“ Would to God the day of doom were arrived, since “ Druids are come, attending the outcry—The gleaming
 “ spears of war have eradicated Powys.”

The Bard had heard a report of the fall of his Prince; but he hoped it might be only a false rumour, till the news was brought by Druids. Here, then, we find the existence of Druids, in the middle of the twelfth century, positively asserted.

CYNDDELW, the great presiding Bard, and Gwalchmai’s contemporary, has many remarkable passages, which imply the same fact. I shall select a few of the most obvious.

In his panegyric upon the celebrated Prince, Owen Gwynedd, we find the Bardic and the Druidical character thus united, and our author himself placed at the head of the order.

Beirnaid amregyd Beirdd am ragor :

* W. Archæol. p 202.

Ath volant Veirddion, Derwyddon Dôr
 O bedeiriaith dyvyn, o bedeir ôr.
 Ath gyvarwyre bardd bre breudor,
 Cynddelw, cynhelw yn y cynnor.

“ Bards are constituted the judges of excellence: and “ Bards will praise thee, even Druids of the circle, of “ four dialects, coming from the four regions. A Bard of
 “ the steep mount will celebrate thee, even Cynddelw, the “ first object in the gate.

In his elegy upon the death of the same Prince, Cynddelw mentions a prophecy of Gwron, whom the Triads represent as one of the first founders of Druidism.

Am eurglawr mwynvawr Môn
 Nid gair gau év goreu Gwron.

“ Of the golden protector, the most courteous Prince of “ Mona, no vain prophecy did Gwron deliver.”

The same Cynddelw maintained a poetic contest for the Bardic chair of Madawc, Prince of Powys, against another Bard, named Seisyll, who asserts his claim to the honour, in virtue of his direct descent from the primitive Bards, or Druids of Britain, a distinction which his adversary could not boast.

Mi biau bôd yn bencerdd
 O iawllîn o iawllwyth Culvardd;
 A hÿn Cynddelw vawr, cawr cyrdd,
 O hon ni henyw beirdd.*

* W. Archaiol. p. 210.

“ It is my right to be master of song—being in a direct line, of the true tribe, a Bard of the inclosure; but Cynddelw the great, the giant of song, is born of a race, which has produced no Bards.”

In his reply, Cynddelw makes light of this argument of his opponent, alledging that he himself was acknowledged to be distinguished by the discipline, the education, and the spirit of a primitive Bard.

Notwithstanding this, we find, by a poem addressed to the same Prince, that he was ready to allow the superior dignity of the Druidical line: and he speaks of this illustrious order as still in being.

Nis gwyr namyn Duw a dewinion—byd,
A diwyd Derwyddion
O eurdorv, eurdorchogion,
Ein rhŷv yn rhyveirth avon.*

“ Excepting God alone, and the diviners of the land, and sedulous Druids, of the splendid race, wearers of gold chains, there is none who knows our number, in the billows of the stream.”

These billows, as it will appear in the third section, allude to their initiation into the mysteries of the Druids.

The elegy on the death of Cadwallawn, the son of Madawc, assimilates the character of this Prince to that of Menw, or Menyw, recorded in the Triads as one of the first instructors and legislators of the Cymry. Here we have also a discrimination of some of the honours, which the Princes usually conferred upon the ancient Bards.

* W. Archaiol. p. 212.

Agored ei lys i lês cerddorion—byd :
 Eithyd i esbyd ei esborthion.
 Ym myw Menw aches buches beirddion :
 Ym buchedd gwledig gwlad orchorddion,
 Gorddyvnas uddud bûdd a berthion
 Gorwyddon tuthvawr tu hir gleision.*

“ His hall was open for the benefit of the singers of the land: for his guests he made provision. Whilst Menw lived, the memorials of Bards were in request: whilst he lived, the sovereign of the land of heroes, it was his custom to bestow benefits and honour, and fleet coursers, on the wearers of long blue robes.”

In a poem addressed to Owen Cyveiliawg, Prince of Powys, who was himself a distinguished Bard, Cynddelw makes repeated mention of the Druids, and their cerdd Ogyrven, or songs of the Goddess; that is, the mystical strains of Taliesin. The piece opens thus.

Dysgogan Derwyddon dewrwlad—y esgar,
 Y wysgwyd weiniviad :
 Dysgweinid cyrdd cydneid cydnad,
 Cyd voliant gwr gormant gorneisiad.

“ It is commanded by Druids of the land, which displays valour to the foe—even by those administrators in flowing robes—let songs be prepared, of equal move-

* W. Archaiol. p. 220.

“ment and corresponding sound, the harmonious praise of
“the hero, who subdues the ravager.”

In the next page, we find the Bard imitating the Druidical lore, or the mystical strains of Taliesin, and representing his hero as having made no contemptible progress in the circle of transmigration.

Mynw ehovyn colovyn cyvwyrein,
Mûr meddgryn mechdeyrn Mechein,
Mwyn Ovydd i veirdd y vaith goelvain—ran
Meirch mygyrvan cynghan cein.
Yn rhith rhyn ysgwyd
Rhag ysgwn blymnwyd
Ar ysgwydd yn arwain
Yn rhith llew rhag llyw goradain;
Yn rhith llavyn anwar llachar llain;
Yn rhith cleddyv claer clôd ysgain—yn aer
Yn aroloedd cyngrain;
Yn rhith draig rhag dragon Prydain;
Yn rhith blaidd blaengar vu Ywain.

“This intrepid hero, like a rising column, like a bul“wark, round the meadhorns of the rulers of Mechain, as “a gentle ovate to the bards of the ample lot, imparts the “fair, lofty coursers, and the harmonious song.

“In the form of a vibrating shield, before the rising “tumult, borne aloft on the shoulder of the leader—in the “form of a lion, before the chief with the mighty wings
“—in the form of a terrible spear, with a glittering “blade—in the form of a bright sword, spreading fame in “the conflict, and overwhelming the levelled ranks—in

“ the form of a dragon, before the sovereign of Britain
 “ and in the form of a daring wolf, has Owen appeared.”

After a few more sentences, the Bard presents us with a curious glimpse of the mystic dance of the Druids.

Drud awyrdwyth, amnwyth, amniver,
 Drudion a Beirddion
 A vawl nêb dragon.

“ Rapidly moving, in the course of the sky, in circles,
 “ in uneven numbers, Druids and Bards unite, in cele“ brating the leader.”

The passages already cited, abundantly prove, not only that there were avowed professors of Druidism in North Wales and Powys, during the twelfth century, and that they regarded the same mystical lore, which is ascribed to Taliesin, as the standard of their system; but also, that their profession was tolerated, and even patronized, by the Princes of those districts.

That the case was nearly the same in South Wales, appears from several passages; and particularly, from a conciliatory address to Rhys, the Prince of that country; in which Cynddelw makes a general intercession for the cause, the mysteries, and the worship of the primitive Bards. He even introduces the sacred cauldron, which makes a principal figure in the mystical strains of Taliesin.

Corv eurdorv can do hwyv i adrev
 Ith edryd ith adrawd îs nêv
 Par eurglawr erglyw vy marddlew!

Fair Prydain provwn yn nhangnev.
 Tangnevedd am nawdd amniverwch—rîv,
 Riallu dyheiddwch.
 Nid achar llachar llavarwch ;
 Nid achles avles arawwch ;
 Nid achludd eurgudd argelwch ;
 Argel carth cerddorion wolwch.
 Dôr ysgor ysgwydneu amdrwch.
 Doeth a drud am dud am degwch ;
 Tarv aergawdd, aergwl gadarnwch.

“ O thou, consolidator of the comely tribe! since I am “ returned home into thy dominion, to celebrate thee under “ heaven—O thou, with the golden, protecting spear, hear
 “ my Bardic petition! In peace, let us taste the cauldron “ of Prydain. Tranquillity round the sanctuary of the “ uneven number, with sovereign power extend! It (the “ Bardic sanctuary) loves not vehement loquacity; it is no
 “ cherisher of useless sloth; it opposes no precious, con“ cealed mysteries (Christianity): disgrace alone is ex“ cluded from Bardic worship. It is the guardian bulwark
 “ of the breaker of shields. It is wise and zealous for “ the defence of the country, and for decent manners; a “ foe to hostile aggression, but the supporter of the faint
 “ in battle.”

In the elegy on the death of Rhiryd, as well as in the passage just cited, Cynddelw seems disposed to reconcile the mystical fables and heathen rites of Druidism, with the profession of Christianity; for, immediately after an invocation of the Trinity, he proceeds thus.

Mor wyv hygleu vardd o veird Ogyrven!
 Mor wyv gwyn gyvrwyv nidwyv gyvrwen!

Mor oedd gyvrin fyrdd cyrdd Kyrridwen :
Mor eisiau eu dwyn yn eu dyrwen !*

“ How strictly conformable a Bard am I, with the Bards
“ of the mystic Goddess ! How just a director, but no im-“ peder ! How mysterious were the ways of the songs of “ Ceridwen ! How necessary to understand them in their “ true sense !”

Here is a direct testimony in favour of those mystical songs, which deduce their origin from the cauldron of Ceridwen, and which the Bard regards as the standard of his own fanatical system. He professes to have understood them in their true sense; and that they were the genuine works of Taliesin, is declared in the same poem.

O ben Taliesin barddrin beirddring ;
Barddair o'm cyvair ni bydd cyving.

“ From the mouth of Taliesin is the Bardic mystery con- “ cealed by the Bards ; the Bardic lore, by my direction,
“ shall be set at large.”

Pliny's account of the Ovum Anguinum is sufficiently known : but it may be conjectured, from the language of Cynddelw, that the angues, or serpents, which produced these eggs, were the Druids themselves.

Tysiliaw terwyn gywrysed
Parth a'm nawdd adrawdd adrysedd—
Peris Nêr ór niver nadredd,
Praf wiber wibiad amrysedd.†

* W. Archaiol. p. 230.

† Ibid. p. 243.

“ Tysilio, ardent in controversy, respecting my sanctuary, declares too much. Nér (the God of the ocean) produced, out of the number of vipers, one huge viper, with excess of windings.

Tysilio, the son of Brochwel, Prince of Powys, in the seventh century, wrote an ecclesiastical history of Britain, which is now lost. It is probable, from this passage, that an explanation and exposure of Druidical mythology, constituted part of his subject; and that the story of the huge serpent, was one of the fables which he ascribed to them.

These specimens may suffice to ascertain Cynddelw's opinion of the Druids, and their mystical lore. It is clear, this great Bard was, in profession, half a Pagan, and so he was regarded. Hence, the monks of Ystrad Marchell sent him notice, that they could not grant him the hospitality of their house whilst living, nor Christian burial when dead.*

LLYWARCH ab Llywelyn, was another cathedral Bard, who wrote between the years 1160 and 1220. He thus speaks of the privileges of his office, and his connection with the Druidical order.

Vy nhavawd yn vrawd ar Vrython
 O vor Ut hyd vor Iwerddon.
 Mi i'm deddv wyv diamryson,
 O'r prŷv veirdd, vy mhrŷv gyveillion.†

“ My tongue pronounces judgment upon Britons, from

* W. Archaiol. p. 263.

† Ibid. p. 283.

“ the British channel to the Irish sea. By my institute, I “ am an enemy to contention—of the order of the primi-
 “ tive Bards, who have been my early companions.”

He admits the power and efficacy of the mystical cauldron.

Duw Dovydd dym rydd reitun Awen—bêr
 Val o bair Kyrridwen.*

“ God, the Ruler, gives me a ray of melodious song, as “ if it were from the cauldron of Ceridwen.”

And again, in his address to Llywelyn, the son of Iorwerth, he acknowledges Taliesin as the publisher of the mystical train.

Cyvarchav i'm Rhên cyvarchvawr Awen,
 Cyvreu Kyrridwen, Rhwyv Barddoni,
 Yn dull Taliesin yn dillwng Elphin,
 Yn dyllest Barddrin Beirdd vanieri.

“ I will address my Lord, with the greatly greeting muse,
 “ with the dowry of Kyrridwen, the Ruler of Bardism,
 “ in the manner of Taliesin, when he liberated Elphin,
 “ when he overshadowed the Bardic mystery with the banners
 “ of the Bards.”†

In the same poem, the Bard speaks of Druidical vaticinations, as known in his time.

* W. Archaiol. p. 290.

† Mr. Turner's Translation.

Darogan Merddin dyvod Breyenhin
 O Gymry werin, o gamhwri:
 Dywawd Derwyddon dadeni haelon,
 O hîl eryron o Eryri.

“ Merddin prophesied, that a King should come, from the Cymry nation, out of the oppressed. Druids have declared, that liberal ones should be born anew, from the progeny of the eagles of Snowdon.”

Such is the testimony of this venerable Bard, as to the genuineness of those mystical poems, which bore the name of Taliesin and Merddin; and in which the lore of the Druids was communicated to the Britons of his age.

ELIDYR SAIS, the contemporary of Llywarch, deduces the melody of his lines from the mystic cauldron, which had been the source of inspiration to Merddin, as well as to Taliesin.

Llethraid vy marddair wedi Merddin
 Llethrid a berid o bair Awen.*

“ Flowing is my bardic lay, after the model of Merddin: a smoothness produced from the cauldron of the Awen.”

PHILIP BRŶDYDD was another Bard, who enjoyed the privilege of the chair of presidency, and wrote between the years 1200 and 1250. This author, alluding to a dispute, in which he had been engaged with certain pretended

* W. Archaiol. p. 250, 252.

Bards, or mere poets, in the court of Rhys, Prince of South Wales, thus expresses his sentiments.

Cadair Vaelgwn hir a huberid—i Veirdd;
 Ac nid i'r goveirdd yd gyverchid :
 Ac am y gadair honno heddiw bei heiddid
 Bod se ynt herwydd gwîr a braint yd ymbroid :
 Byddynt Derwyddon pruddion Prydain ;
 Nis gwaew yn adain nid attygid.*

“ The chair of the great Maelgwn was publicly prepared
 “ for Bards; and not to poetasters was it given in com“ pliment: and if, at this day, they were to aspire to that “ chair, they would be proved, by truth and privilege, to “ be what they really are: the grave Druids of Britain
 “ would be there; nor could these attain the honour, though
 “ their wing should ach with fluttering.”

The chair of Maelgwn, it is known, was filled by the mystical Taliesin; and the Bard declares, that grave Druids, whose prerogative it was to determine the merit of candidates for this chair, were still in being. In the same poem, he asserts the dignity of the Druidical order, and ridicules some popular errors respecting their scanty means of subsistence.

Ar y llen valchwen ni vylchid—y braint
 Yd ysgarawd henaint ag ienenetid,
 Rhwng y pren frwythlawn
 A'r tair prîv fynawn,
 Nid oedd ar îrgrawn
 Yd ymborthid,

* W. Archaiol, p. 377.

“ Of the proud white garment (the Druidical robe) which “ separated the elders from the youth, the privilege might “ not be infringed. Between the fruit-bearing tree, and “ the three primary fountains, it was not upon green berries
 “ ries that they subsisted.”

The fruit-bearing tree was the same as the arbor frugifera of Tacitus, and Merddin's Avallen Beren---the means of divining by lots, as will be seen hereafter. The three mystical fountains are the theme of Taliesin, in a poem which treats of the formation of the world. The Bard, therefore, implies, that religious mystery, and the profession of physiology, were sources from which the Druids derived a comfortable support.

HYWEL VOEL wrote between 1240 and 1280. In an ode, addressed to Owen, the son of Gruffudd, he compares his hero to Gwron, one of the three founders of Druidism, and acknowledges him as protector of the city, or community of Bards.

Digabyll wawr, gwriawr val Gwron,
 Gwraidd blaid bliant arwyddon
 Dinam hael, o hîl eryron,
 Dinag draig dinas Cerddorian.†

“ Fairly dawning, manly-like Gwron, the root whence “ sprung the pliable tokens (the mystical sprigs or lots)
 “ blameless and liberal, of the race of eagles, undoubted
 “ dragon (guardian) of the city of Bards.”

* W. Archaiol. p. 393.

We shall find, that eagles and dragons are conspicuous figures in Bardic mythology.

MADAWG DWYGRAIG lived at the period when the Welsh government was finally ruined, and wrote between the years 1290 and 1340. He thus laments the death of his patron, Gruffudd ab Madawg.

Yn nhair llys y gwys gwaig ddygnedd,
 Nad byw llun teyrnaidd llyw, llin teyrnedd
 Balch y beirdd, bobl heirdd harddedd—HU ysgwr
 Bryn, hynawwalch gwr brenhineidd wêdd.
 Yn nhrevgoed i'n rhoed anrhydedd—Digeirdd
 Ym, ac virein veirdd am overedd,
 Yn gynt no'r lluchwynt arllechwedd—Ystrad.*

“ In three halls is felt the oppression of anguish, that he “ lives not, the chief of princely form, of the royal and “ proud line of the Bards, a dignified race, the ornament
 “ of HU, darting on the mount, most ancient of heroes, “ of kingly presence. In the dwelling of the wood (the “ sacred grove) honour was awarded to us: whilst uninstituted, “ though elegant Bards, were pursuing vanity “ swifter than the sudden gale, that skims over the sloping “ shore.”

It will be seen hereafter that HU, to whom the Bards were devoted in their hallowed wood, was the great dæmon god of the British Druids.

We are now come down to the age of Edward the First,

* W. Archaiol. p. 48t.

the reputed assassinator of the Bards, the tale of whose cruelty has been immortalized by the pen of Grey.

But here, fame has certainly calumniated the English King; for there is not the name of a single Bard upon record, who suffered, either by his hand, or by his orders. His real act was the removal of that patronage, under which the Bards had hitherto cherished the heathenish superstition of their ancestors, to the disgrace of our native Princes.

A threefold addition to such extracts as the preceding, might easily be made from the writers of this period; but, I trust, what is here produced, will be deemed an ample foundation for the following inferences:

1. That the ancient superstition of Druidism, or, at least, some part of it, was considered as having been preserved in Wales without interruption, and cherished by the Bards, to the very last period of the Welsh Princes.

2. That these Princes were so far from discouraging this superstition, that, on the contrary, they honoured its professors with their public patronage.

3. That the Bards who flourished under these Princes, especially those who enjoyed the rank of Bardd Cadair, or filled the chair of presidency, avowed themselves true disciples of the ancient Druids.

4. That they professed to have derived their knowledge of Druidical lore, from the works of certain ancient and primitive Bards, which constituted their principal study, and which were regarded as genuine, and of good authority.

5. That amongst these masters, they mention, with eminent respect, the names of Taliesin and Merddin; and particularly extol that mystical lore, which was derived from the cauldron of Ceridwen, and published by the former of those Bards.

6. That they describe the matter contained in their sacred poems, as precisely the same which we still find in the mystical pieces, preserved under the names of Taliesin and Merddin; so that there can be no doubt as to the identity of those pieces.

And, 7. That upon the subject of genuine British tradition, they specifically refer to no writers which are now extant, as of higher authority than Taliesin and Merddin.

I therefore conclude, that the poems of the ancient Bards, here specified, however their value, as composition, may be appreciated, are to be ranked amongst the most authentic documents which the Welsh possess, upon the subject of British Druidism.

A diligent attention to the works of those Bards, will enable us to bring forward some other ancient documents, which have been drawn up in a concise and singular form, for the purpose of assisting the memory; which are evidently derived from the sources of primitive Bardic lore, and therefore are undoubted repositories of genuine British tradition.

The documents I mean, are those which are generally called the historical Triads, though many of them, strictly speaking, are purely mythological.

These documents have lately been treated with much affected and unmerited contempt.

It is admitted, that the notices contained in some few of the Triads, appear, upon a superficial view, to be either absurd or trifling; and it may be inferred, from one or two others, that the Welsh had not wholly relinquished this mode of composition, till a short period before the dissolution of their national government.

It is also acknowledged, that the testimony of copyists, as to the antiquity of the MSS. which they consulted, goes no higher than to the tenth century.

But these circumstances will hardly justify some modern critics in the assertion, that the Triads are altogether futile; that they are modern; that there is no proof of their containing genuine Welsh tradition; and that they were never collected in writing before the date of those MSS. which are expressly recorded.

Hardy assertion and dogmatical judgment are soon pronounced; but the candid and consistent antiquary, who shall refuse any degree of credit to the British Triads, will find many things to prove, as well as to assert, before he comes to his conclusion.

I know of no peculiarity in the habits of the Celtic nations more prevalent, or which can be traced to higher antiquity, than their propensity to make ternary arrangements—to describe one thing under three distinct heads, or to bring three distinct objects under one point of view.

This feature presents itself in their geographical and political schemes. The nations of Gaul were divided into three great confederacies; the Belgæ, the Aquitani, and the proper Celtæ: and these were united in one body, by the Concilium totius Galliæ, in which we find that the members of each confederacy had equally their seat.*

Again: we are told, that in omni Galliâ, or throughout these three confederacies, the inhabitants were distributed into three ranks—the Druidæ, the Equites, and the Plebes; and that the priesthood was subdivided into Druids, Bards, and Ovates,

The Britons, in like manner, divided their island into Llôeger, Cymru ag Alban: and when they were shut up in Wales, that district, without regard to the actual number of their reigning Princes, constituted three regions, called Gwynedd, Pywys a Deheubarth; and each of these was distributed into a number of Cantrevs, Cwmmwods, and Trevs.

That this humour of ternary classification pervaded the Druidical school, I have already shewn from ancient authority; which presents us with the only maxims of the Druids, which had become public, in the identical form of Welsh Triads.

* Cæs. de Bell. Gal. L. I. c. 30.—L. VI. c. 3.

The ancient Welsh laws, which were revised by Howel Dda in the former part of the tenth century, present us with a long book of Triads, and these are called Trioedd Cyvraith, Triades Forenses,* by way of distinction from the well-known Trioedd Ynys Prydain.

Will it be said, that this national partiality to Triads had been forgotten for ages, and was afterwards renewed by the Welsh of the tenth century? Or, if a dashing critic were to hazard the assertion, how is he to support it?

Mr. Turner has demonstrated, that the Gododin of Aneurin is a genuine composition of the sixth century. But so fond were the Britons of the ternary arrangement, in the days of Aneurin, that in one single page of that work, he distinctly recites the titles of ten Triads, and that merely in the description of an army.

Taliesin, the contemporary of this Bard, is full of allusion to Triads, which had existed from remote antiquity, and which he cites with respect, by way of authority.

For example.

1. Tair fynawn y sydd. W. Archaiol. p. 20.
2. Trydydd par yngnad, p. 35.
3. Tri thri noddod.
4. Tri charn avlawg, p. 44.
5. Tri lloneid Prydwen, p. 45.
6. Tri wyr nod, p. 48.
7. Tair blynedd dihedd, p. 49.
8. Tri dillyn diachor.

* Wotton's Leg. Wall. L. IV. p. 298.

9. Tair llynges yn aches.
10. Tri diwedydd cad.
11. Tri phriawd Gwlad, p. 64.
12. Trydedd down doethur.
13. Tri chynweisad.
14. Tri chyvarwydd, p. 65, &c. &c.

That Triads were perfectly familiar to the age of Aneurin and Taliesin, is a fact which needs no farther proof: and I know of no reason to surmise, that they had not been committed to writing before that period.

Some of the identical Triads, mentioned by the oldest Bards, are still preserved; others have been lost. We do not possess a complete collection* of these scraps of antiquity. The respectable antiquary, Thomas Jones, of Tregaron, informs us, that in the year 1601, he could recover only 126 out of THE THREE HUNDRED, a definite number of which he had some particular account. The research of later times has not been competent to make up the deficiency. †

As the authority of the Triads was quoted, with eminent respect, by the most ancient Bards now extant, we may fairly infer, that the matter contained in them was analogous to the doctrine of those Bards, and that it is the genuine remains of more ancient Bards, who had professed the same religion. I shall make it appear, in the course of the Essay, that such was the real state of the affair.

* The term Collection has offended some minute critics. They ask for the Book of Triads, and the name of the author. They might as well ask for the Book of adages, and the name of the author. Every Triad is a whole in itself; and the ancient copyists transcribed only as many as suited their occasion, or pleased their fancy.

† W. Archaiol. Vol. II. p. 75.

Out of the catalogue of Triads, I shall therefore only strike out about half a dozen, which refer to more recent facts in history, or else betray a tincture of the cloister; and the remainder I shall freely use, when occasion requires, in conjunction with Taliesin, Aneurin, and Merddin, as genuine repositories of British tradition: and to these I shall add some mythological tales, which appear, from internal evidence and correspondent imagery, to have been derived from the same source.

From the general persuasion of the Welsh, and the known state of literature in the country, I had formed an opinion, that no documents, materially differing from those already mentioned, could have an equal claim to authenticity, as Cambro-British tradition: and that the early Bards and the Triads were, in fact, the great sources of information upon this subject.

Other records, however, in some respects irreconcilable with the former, have been pointed out of late years by Mr. Owen, the author of the Welsh-English Dictionary, and Mr. Ed. Williams, author of two volumes of ingenious poems.

In order to estimate the value of such novel claimants as these records, I shall, first all, consider their pretensions, as stated by those writers who have announced them to the Public.

Mr. Owen's edition of Llywarch Hên appeared in the year 1792. The introduction contains a long account of Bardism, drawn up by the assistance of Mr. Williams, and from his communications. This account states, that the British constitution of Bardism, or Druidism, having continued in Wales, without interruption, to the dissolution of the Cambro-British government, was, in consequence of that event, in danger of becoming extinct. But that within twenty years after the death of the last Llewelyn, certain members of the order established a chair, a kind of Bardic college, in Glamorganshire, which has continued to this day. A catalogue is given of the presidents and members of this chair, from Trahaearn Brydydd Mawr, the first president, or founder, in 1300, down to the present Mr. Ed. Williams.

We are also told, that certain members, in the sixteenth century, began to collect the learning, laws, and traditions of the order into books; that these collections were revised and ratified in the seventeenth century; and that they are still received as the fundamental rules of the society.*

From the passages to which I refer, it appears, that Mr. Owen derives his information from Mr. Williams; and the latter from the acts, traditions, and usages of the Chair of Glamorgan, as contained in their ratified documents of the seventeenth century.

It may fairly be pleaded, that the acts of a society of Bards, which was incorporated within twenty years after the

* See Mr. Owen's Introd. to Ll. Hên. pp. 60, 61, 62.

Mr. Williams's Poems, Vol. II. p. 94.

See also Mr. Turner's Vindication, p. 226, and a circumstantial note, communicated by Mr. Owen, p. 227, &c. deprivation of the Welsh Princes, the undoubted patrons of Bards and Bardism; and which has continued, without interruption, for five hundred years, must contain many curious and important particulars relative to this ancient and national order of men.

But a slight inquiry into the credentials of the society itself, will discover some marks of gross misrepresentation, if not of absolute forgery; and, consequently, suggest the necessity of great caution in admitting its traditions.

1. Trahaearn Brydydd Mawr is recorded as having presided in the year 1300;* and several of his successors, between that date and 1370, are also mentioned. But the learned antiquary, Ed. Llwyd, gives the area of the same Trahaearn, An. 1380;† and this from the Red Book of Hergest, a MS. written about the close of the fourteenth century, when the age of our Bard must have been accurately known. He could not, therefore, have presided in the year 1300, nor be succeeded by the persons who are recorded as his successors; and thus the ratified account of the establishment of the chair, betrays a combination of fraud and ignorance.

2. But in whatever manner this chair arose, its acts record a schism, which dissolved the union of the order, and occasioned the chair of Glamorgan to separate from that of Carmarthen, in the middle of the fifteenth century.‡ It would therefore become a question, which party preserved the genuine usages of their predecessors; for in such dis-sensions, the right cause is always pleaded by both sides.

* Owen's Introd. p. 62.

† Archæol. Brit. p. 264.

‡ See Turner's Vindic. p. 229, &c. and Owen's Introd. p. 60.

3. The celebrity and respectable support of the chair of Glamorgan, will go but a little way in the asser-tion of its cause. Such was its obscurity, that the Welsh nation, far from receiving its acts as the genuine tradition of the coun-try, had scarcely any knowledge or tradition of the exist-ence of such a society. The few rustics by whom the members were noticed in their fanatical meetings, *generally supposed them to be infidels, conjurors, and we know not what.

4. It does not appear, from their own profession, nor from the research of Llwyd, and other antiquaries, that this society possessed a single copy of the works of the ancient Bards, previous to the eighteenth century: and they had not begun writing and digesting their own laws and insti-tutes, till more than two centuries and a half after the pre-tended æra of their establishment.

The late collection of their acts, which was begun about the year 1560, and repeatedly altered, from that time to the year 1681, together with the avowed obscurity of the so-ciety in preceding times, may excite a suspicion, that in all instances, genuine tradition was not within their reach, however fair their pretensions to candour might have been; for these were not of the illustrious line of primitive Bards, wearers of gold chains.

And a defect of information actually appears, in an in-stance where we should, least of all, have expected to find it.

* Ed. Williams' Poems, V. II. p. 161.

Trahaearn is brought forward as the founder of the chair, or the first president; and yet the members have neither document nor certain tradition, by which they can identify the genuine composition of this father of the society. He is only *supposed to be the same person, who distinguished himself under the assumed name of Casnodyn.

5. But most of all, the information which Mr. Owen communicates, from the authority of the chair itself, advises some suspension of confidence in the acts of this society.

“ In this respect (of religion) the Bards adhered to, or departed from, their original traditions, only according to the evidence that might be acquired, from time to time, in their search after truth.” †

And again—“ The continuation of the institution did not depend upon the promulgation of certain articles of faith, but upon its separate principles of social compact.”

This is surely a very compliant system, totally different from the idea which I had formed of the primitive Bards or Druids, as sticklers for inveterate opinions, and superstitious rites. We must not ask the chair of Glamorgan, what were the opinions of the Bards a thousand years ago; but what opinions do they choose to adopt at present?

A pretended search after truth leads men into the inextricable mazes of new philosophy and new politics, as well as of new religions, just as they are conducted by the various fancies of their guides, or by their own; and if a society avowedly departs from its original principles, to pursue one new path, I see no reason why it should be incapable of doing the same, to follow another.

* Owen's Cam. Biog. V. Trahaearn.

† Introd. to Ll. Hên. p. 28.

It may be wise for men to despise exploded errors, and addict themselves to a candid search after truth; but if, at the same time that they take this salutary course, they pretend to be the sole and infallible repositories of ancient tradition, ancient opinions, and ancient usages, they may surely be charged with inconsistency.

For the reasons which I have now stated, I must take the liberty to search after facts, rather than adopt, with implicit confidence, the dogmas of this newly-discovered society.

Mr. Williams, whether he styles himself president, or sole surviving member, values himself highly upon his superior collection of Welsh manuscripts. Whatever he has, that can bear the light, I should be glad to see it produced to the Public; and I would cheerfully contribute my mite to facilitate its appearance. But he has no copy of a single British writer, more ancient, or better accredited, than those which I adduce in the course of my inquiry, and which the light, held forth from his chair, has certainly misrepresented.

I therefore appeal, from his whole library, to the authority of documents, which have been known for ages to exist; which are now accessible to every man who understands the language; and which, as I have already shewn, have been regarded as authentically derived from the Druidical school.

In order to ascertain, as nearly as I can, that degree of credit which is due to the ancient Bards, it is part of my plan to confront them with a few historical facts relative to the Druids.

Mr. Williams cannot object to the candour of my proceeding, if, occasionally, I bring the dogmas of his society to the same impartial test. The result I shall submit, without hesitation, to the judgment of the reader.

In the first place, then, it is well known, that amongst the subjects in which the Druids were conversant, the profession of magic made a prominent figure. Dr. Borlase has a whole chapter, well supported with authorities—"Of their divinations, charms, and incantations;" and another "Of the great resemblance betwixt the Druid and Persian superstition."* Pliny calls the Druids, the Magi of the Gauls and Britons: † and of our island he says expressly—"Britannia hodie eam (sc. Magiam) attonitè celebrat, tantis cæremoniis, ut eam Persis dedisse videri possit."

Such authorities, together with the general voice of the Bards, as it reached my ear, I regarded as a sufficient justification for having denominated the lots of the Druids magical lots. But this, it seems, has given umbrage to the present representative of Taliesin. In an unprovoked attack upon my book, he asks—"Why did Mr. Davies impute magic to the British Bards, or Druids? In the many thousands of ancient poems still extant, there is not a syllable that mentions, or even alludes to any such thing."

* Antiq. of Cornwall, B. II. ch. 21, 22.

† L. 29, c. 1.

This assertion, coming from a man who has, for many years, been an adept in the mysteries of Bardism; who possesses and has read more Welsh MSS. than any other man in the principality; and has made the works of the Bards his particular study for more than fifty years, seems to bear hard, not only upon the propriety of my expression, but upon the claim of the Bards themselves to the lore of the Druids. If this assertion be correct, in vain shall the Bards of the twelfth and thirteenth century, ascribe to Taliesin; and in vain shall he acknowledge the Druidical character.

But the precipitate use which this writer occasionally makes of his extensive information, emboldens me to examine his accuracy in the present instance.

I find it is a settled maxim with the chair of Glamorgan, that the British Bards were no conjurors. In a note upon his Poems,* which were published in the year 1794, the President having stated, upon the authority of Edmund Prys, that Meugant lived about the close of the fourth century, and was preceptor to the celebrated Merlin, sub-joins the following information, as from himself:

“ There are still extant some poems of Meugant, as well
 “ as of his disciple Merlin; and from these pieces, we “ clearly perceive that they were neither prophets nor con-
 “ jurors, though said to have been such, by some who were “ certainly no great conjurors themselves: they were honest
 “ Welsh Bards, who recorded, in verse, the occurrences
 “ of their own times, never troubling themselves with “ futurity.”

* V. II. p. 5.

As to the æras of Meugant and Merlin (or Merddin), it may be observed, that there are no remains of the former, but an elegy upon the death of Cynddylan, a Prince of Powys, in the sixth century; and another little piece, which mentions Cadvan, who died about the year 630.* The only Merlin, or Merddin, of whom any thing is extant, was Merddin Wyllt, the Caledonian, who was present at the battle of Arderydd, near the close of the sixth century, and survived that event by many years.

And how can these Bards be said never to have troubled themselves with futurity? The first of Meugant's poems opens in the high prophetic style—Dydd dyvydd—"The day will come;" and speaks of the Druids as true prophets. And, under the name of Merddin, we have scarcely any thing, either genuine or spurious, but descriptions of magical lots, auguries by birds, and strings of pretended vaticinations.

So much for the integrity of this dictatorial chair. And, if the recollection of the President deserted him, upon a subject so notorious, may we not surmise the possibility of a few passages, which contain some allusion to magic, having escaped his memory.

Before I adduce proofs of the fact here suggested, I must premise, that I do not understand the term magic, when applied to the Druids and their disciples, as restricted to the profession of necromancy, or conjuring; but as including the practice of mysterious rites, under pretence of producing extraordinary effects, from natural causes. Such, I apprehend, was the magic of Britain, which Pliny contemplated with astonishment. If, therefore, it be true, that the ancient British Bards neither mentioned nor alluded to magical rites, in this or any other sense, it is an unanswerable objection to the authenticity of their pretensions, as preservers of Druidical lore. But this is by no means the case.

* W. Archaiol. p. 259, 260.

In the passages which I have extracted, from the Bards of the middle centuries, we have had frequent mention of the mystical cauldron, which was viewed as the source of inspiration.

Taliesin acknowledges the same cauldron as the fountain of his genius; and, in a mythological tale, describing the initiation of that Bard, we find the Goddess Ceridwen preparing the water of this sacred vase, which contained a decoction of potent herbs, collected with due observation of the planetary hours. So efficacious was this medicated water, that no sooner had three drops of it touched the lips of the Bard, than all futurity was displayed to his view.*

As I shall have occasion hereafter to introduce this curious tale, I shall not enlarge upon it at present, or upon Taliesin's account of the various ingredients of the cauldron, in the poem called his Chair. I only submit to the reader's judgment, that this is absolute magic, as understood

* W. Archaiol. p. 17.

This genuine Bardic account of the production of the water of Awen, or Inspiration, is scarcely reconcilable with the doctrine which Mr. Owen derives from the chair of Glamorgan; namely, that—"The Bardic theology, laws and principles, have, in all ages, been referred to inspiration, or asserted to be derived from heaven, under the denomination of Awen."

Introd. to Ll. Hên, p. 63.

by the ancients. But lest this should not come up to the idea which has been conceived of the mysterious art, I must endeavour to produce allusions to something that looks more like conjuring.

In the Welsh Archaology, there is a remarkable song ascribed to Taliesin, which begins thus.

Duw difer nevwy rhag llanw lled ovrwy!
Cyntav attarwy atreis tros vordwy.

Py bren a vo mwy noc ev Daronwy,
Nid vu am noddwy, amgylch balch Nevwy.

Yssid rin y sydd mwy, gwawr gwyr Goronwy,
Odid a'i gwypwy; hudlath Vathonwy,
Ynghoed pan dyvwy frwythau mwy Cymrwy
Ar lan Gwyllionwy: Kynan a'i cafwy
Pryd pan wledychwy.*

“ May the heavenly God protect us from a general overflowing! The first surging billow has rolled beyond the sea beach. A greater tree than he, Taronwy, there has not been, to afford us a sanctuary, round the proud celestial circle.

“ There is a greater secret, the dawn of the men of Goronwy, though known to few—the magic wand of Mathonwy, which grows in the wood, with more exuberant fruit, on the bank of the river of spectres: Kynan shall obtain it at the time when he governs.”

* W. Archaïol. p, 62.

This wand surely carries some allusion to the profession of magic, an art which is openly avowed in the Incantation of Cynvelyn.*

But lest the accuracy of my translation should be disputed, I shall exhibit a few passages of that remarkable poem, in Mr. Owen's own version.

“ Were I to compose the strain—were I to sing—magic spells would spring, like those produced by the circle and wand of Twrch Trwyth.”

“ Cynvelyn—the enricher of the divining magician, whose spell shall be as powerful as the form of Morien—under the thighs of the generous, in equal pace shall run, the sprites of the gloom, skimming along the pleasant hills.”

“ The superior of the prize-contending songs is the guardian spell of Cynvelyn, the beloved chief, from whom blessings flow.”

“ The guardian spell of Cynvelyn—on the plains of Gododin—shall it not prevail over Odin!” †

Such are the poems, in which it has been asserted, “ there is not a syllable that mentions magic, or even alludes to any such thing.” And such is the candid translation, with which our ingenious lexicographer gratified the curious, only two years before he published his Llywarch Hén, and announced the principles of the chair of Glamorgan.

* W. Archaiol. p. 158.

† Gent. Mag. Nov. 1790.

Thus it appears, that the Druidical profession of the Bards is not discredited by an abhorrence of magic, an art which antiquity positively ascribes to their predecessors, both in Gaul and Britain. Let the recent code make good its own assertions.

That the Druids did use sortilege, or divination by lots, which seems to have been a branch of magic, is another historical fact, ascertained by the testimony of Pliny, who says, that they exhibited the Vervain in the exercise of that superstitious rite. It may be added, that the use of tallies, or sprigs, cut from a fruit-bearing tree, which Tacitus ascribes to the Germans, was probably common to them with the Druids, because we still find allusions to the same subject in the British Bards.*

In my late volume, I stated what appeared to me the genuine tradition of the Britons, relative to these lots; and with them I connected the letters, which are called Coelbreni, Omensticks, Lots, or Tallies. †

My opinion, I thought, was innocent at least; but it produced from Mr. Williams a severe philippic, together with an exposition of some curious mythology, upon the origin of letters and language, which is not to be found in any ancient British writer. This was put into the hands of my best friends: but I shall not take farther notice of manuscript or oral criticism. I only wish the author to publish it; when I see it in print, my answer shall be ready.

* See Sect. V.

† Celt. Res. p. 245, &c.

I now go on to consider the character of the ancient Bards, as natural philosophers. With what success the Druids, their avowed preceptors, cultivated the study of nature, and what system of physiology they taught to their disciples, may be matter of curious inquiry, which I must leave to others. But as to the fact, that they addicted themselves to studies of this kind, we have many express testimonies in the ancients. I select the following.

* “Ea divinationum ratio, ne, in barbaris quidem gentem gentibus neglecta est: siquidem, et in Galliâ, Druides sunt, e quibus ipse Divitiacum Aeduum, hospitem tuum laudatoremque, cognovi: qui et naturæ rationem, quam physiologiam Græci appellant, notam esse sibi profiturur, et, partim auguriis, partim conjecturâ, quæ essent futura dicebat.” †

Upon this passage I would remark, that Cicero does not speak from vague report: he declares the profession of a man who was personally known to him, who had been his guest, and with whom he had familiarly conversed. He also gives unequivocal testimony, that Divitiacus Aeduus was a Druid, and well versed in the various studies of his order.

It must be recollected, that this same Prince of the Aedui was the intimate friend and companion of Cæsar,

* “This method of divination has not been neglected even amongst barbarous nations. For there are Druids in Gaul, with one of whom I was acquainted, namely, Divitiacus Aeduus, who enjoyed the hospitality of your house, and spoke of you with admiration. This man not only professed an intimate knowledge of the system of nature, which the Greeks call Physiology, but also foretold future events, partly by augury, and partly by conjecture.”

† Cic. de Divinatione, L. I.

and that he enjoyed the confidence of that great man, at the very time he drew up his valuable account of the Druids. It is more than barely probable, that this account was collected from the actual communications of Divitiacus; for it is immediately subjoined to the relation of his embassy to the senate of Rome, and the acknowledgment of the pre-eminent rank of his countrymen, the Aedui. From hence I would infer, that Cæsar had procured the most accurate information upon the subject of the Druids, and consequently, that every circumstance in his memorial has a claim to the highest respect.

This competent historian, therefore, having stated the tradition, that the discipline of these ancient priests had been first established in Britain; and the fact, that at the time when he wrote, those who wished to be more accurately instructed in the Druid lore, generally went into Britain for their education; proceeds to specify, amongst the topics of their study—* Multa præterea—de rerum naturâ—disputant—et juventuti tradunt. †.

We have, then, abundant authority to assert, that the Druids aspired to the character of natural philosophers: and it would be reasonable to demand of the Bards, their professed disciples, some pretensions of the same kind.

The poems of Taliesin furnish several passages, which may be classed under this head. Of these, the following cosmography may be given as a curious specimen.

* They also dispute largely upon subjects of natural philosophy, and instruct the youth in their principles.

† De Bell. Gall. L. VI, c. 14.

Os ywch brîv veirdion
 Cyrwyv celvyddon,
 Traethwch orchuddion
 O'r Mundi maon—

Ymae pryv atgas,
 O gaer Satanas,
 A oresgynas
 Rhwng dwvn a bâs.
 Cylvled yw ei enau
 A mynydd Mynnau.
 Nys gorvydd angau
 Na llaw na llavnau.
 Mae llwyth naw can maen
 Yn rhawn dwy bawen :
 Un llygad yn ei ben
 Gwyrdd val glâs iäen.

Tair fynawn y sydd
 Yn ei wegorlydd ;
 Mor vryched arnaw
 A noviant trwyddaw
 Bu laith bualawn
 Deivr ddonwy dyvr ddawn.

Henwau'r tair fynawn
 O ganol eigiawn :
 Un llwydd heli
 Pan vo yn corini
 I edryd liant
 Dros moroedd divant.

Yr ail yn ddinam
 A ddygwydd arnam

Pan vo'r glaw allan
 Drwy awyr ddylan.
 Y drydedd a ddawedd
 Trwy wythi mynyddedd
 Val callestig wledd
 O waith rex rexedd.*

“ If ye are primitive Bards,
 “ According to the discipline of qualified instructors,
 “ Relate the great secrets
 “ Of the world which we inhabit.—

“ There is a formidable animal,
 “ From the city of Satan,
 “ Which has made an inroad
 “ Between the deep and the shallows.
 “ His mouth is as wide
 “ As the mountain of Mynnau:
 “ Neither death can vanquish him,
 “ Nor hand, nor swords.
 “ There is a load of nine hundred rocks
 “ Between his two paws:
 “ There is one eye in his head,
 “ Vivid as the blue ice.

“ Three fountains there are,
 “ In his receptacles;
 “ So thick about him,
 “ And flowing through him,
 “ Have been the moistening horns
 “ Of Deivr Donwy, the giver of waters.

* W. Archaiol. p. 20.

“ The names of, the three fountains, that spring
 “ From the middle of the deep.—

“ One is the increase of salt water,
 “ When it mounts aloft,
 “ Over the fluctuating seas,
 “ To replenish the streams.

“ The second is that which, innocently,
 “ Descends upon us,
 “ When it rains without;
 “ Through the boundless atmosphere.

“ The third is that which springs
 “ Through the veins of the mountains,
 “ As a banquet from the flinty rock,
 “ Furnished by the King of Kings.”

Though the Bard has introduced the foreign terms, Satanas, Mundi, and Rex, yet it is evident, that he intends the doctrine contained in this passage, as a select piece of Druidical lore: hence he proposes the question, as a touchstone, to prove the qualifications of those who professed themselves instructors in primitive Bardism.

The Druids, therefore, represented the visible world, not as formed by the word of a wise and beneficent Creator, but as an enormous animal, ascending out of the abyss, and from the abode of an evil principle. The same subject is touched upon in another passage, where we discover, that the British name of this evil principle was Gwarthawn.

Yssid teir fynawn
 Ym mynydd Fuawn:

Yssid Gaer Gwarthawu
A dan don eigiawn.*

- “ There are three fountains
“ In the mountain of Fuawen:
“ The city of Gwarthawn
“ Is beneath the wave of the deep.”

I might have compared another passage with the above, had it not been for the want of curiosity in the transcribers of our old manuscripts. Mr. Morris has consigned great part of an ancient poem to oblivion, because “ it contained “ an odd sort of philosophy, about the origin of salt water, “ rain, and springs.” †

The absurd and monstrous idea of the formation of the world, which we have been now considering, is certainly from the very lowest school of heathenism. It is utterly irreconcilable with Mr. Williams’s new British Mythology, and with his story of Enigat the Great; though not much dissimilar to the genuine doctrine of his chair, exhibited at the conclusion of his poetical works.

The reader may not be displeased with a few more Questions Druidica, as proposed by the same Taliesin. The Bard has not, indeed, added the solutions of his problems, but they may serve to point out the subjects of his study, and his ambition to be esteemed a general physiologist.

In a poem, which is called Mabgyvreu, or Elements of Instruction, he demands of his disciple—

E

* W. Archaiol. p. 32.

† Ibid. p. 47.

Py dadwrith mwg;
 Pyd echenis mwg?

“ What is it which decomposes smoke;
 “ And from what element does smoke arise?”

Py fynawn a ddiwg,
 Uch argel tywyllwg,
 Pan yw calav can
 Pan yw nôs lloergan?

“ What fountain is that, which bursts forth,
 “ Over the covert of darkness,
 “ When the reed is white,
 “ And the night is illuminated by the moon?”

A wyddosti beth wyd
 Pan vyth yn cysgwyd :
 Ai corph ai enaid,
 Ai argel kannwyd ?]

“ Knowest thou what thou art,
 “ In the hour of sleep—
 “ A mere body—a mere soul—
 “ Or a secret retreat of light?”

Eilewydd celvydd,
 Py'r na'm dyweid ?
 A wyddosti cwdd vydd
 Nos yn aros dydd ?
 A wyddosti arwydd
 Pet deilen y sydd ?
 Py drychevis mynydd
 Cyn rhewiniaw elvydd ?

Py gynneil magwyr
 Daear yn breswyl.
 Enaid pwy gwynawr
 Pwy gwelas ev—Pwy gwyr?

- “ O skilful son of harmony,
 “ Why wilt thou not answer me?
 “ Knowest thou where the night awaits
 “ For the passing of the day?
 “ Knowest thou the token (mark or character)
 “ Of every leaf which grows?
 “ What is it which heaves up the mountain
 “ Before the convulsion of elements?
 “ Or what supports the fabric
 “ Of the habitable earth?
 “ Who is the illuminator of the soul—
 “ Who has seen--who knows him!”

The following seems to be a reflection upon the teachers of another system.

Rhyveddav yn llyfrau
 Na wyddant yn ddiau
 Enaid pwy ei hadnau;
 Pwy bryd ei haelodau:
 Py barth pan ddinau;
 Py wynt a py frau.

- “ I marvel that, in their books,
 “ They know not, with certainty,
 “ What are the properties of the soul:
 “ Of what form are its members:
 “ In what part, and when, it takes up its abode;
 “ By what wind, or what stream it is supplied.”

In the Angar Cyvyndawd, of which I have inserted the beginning in the Celtic Researches, we have several questions of the same kind proposed; as,

“ At what time, and to what extent, will land be productive?”—“ What is the extent and diameter of the earth?”—“ Who is the Regulator, between heaven and earth?”—“ What brings forth the clear gem (glain) from the working of stones?”—“ Where do the cuckoos, which visit us in the summer, retire during the winter?”

“ From the deep I bring forth the strain—let a river be specified—I know its qualities when it ebbs or flows, swells or subsides.”

“ I know what foundations there are beneath the sea: I mark their counterparts, each in its sloping plane.”—Osgor.

“ Who carried the measuring line of the Lord of causes—what scale was used, when the heavens were reared aloft; and who supported the curtain, from the earth to the skies?”

Of these, and a multitude of similar questions, Taliesin professes, that he could teach the true solution. In his own opinion, therefore, he was as great a physiologist as Divitiacus Aeduis, or any other Druid of the hallowed grove.

Amongst the studies of the Druids, Cæsar enumerates astronomy and geography; but the remaining works of the Bards scarcely afford us an opportunity of judging, as to their proficiency in these sciences.

If the poem called Canu y byd mawr, "The great song of the world," contains any thing of Druidism, we must acknowledge at least, that it is mixed with a large proportion of foreign matter.

The subject is man and the universe.—The soul is said to be seated in the head of man, who is composed of seven elements, Fire, Earth, Water, Air, Vapour, Blossom (the fructifying principle), and the wind of purposes (q. whether the soul or the passions?) He is endowed with seven senses, appetite and aversion being admitted into the number.—Hence, perhaps, the vulgar phrase, of being frightened out of one's seven senses. There are seven skies or spheres over the head of the diviner.

There are three divisions of the sea, answering to the like number of shores.

Thus far, for aught I know, the Bard may have drawn from the source of Druidism: but he proceeds to reckon up the seven planets, by names which are borrowed or corrupted from the Latin—Sola, Luna, Marca, Marcarucia, Venus, SEVERUS, Saturnus.

Of the five zones of the earth, two are cold, one is hot and uninhabited, the fourth contains the inhabitants of pa- radise, and the fifth is the dwelling-place of mortals, divided into three parts, Asia, Africa, and Europe.*

In the little song of the world, the Bard brings forward a national system, differing from that which was taught by the Bards of the world, or the instructors of other nations. This little piece deserves attention. It is not mythological, but philosophical, and seems, in some respects, to correspond with the system of Pythagoras, who had many ideas in common with the Druids, and is expressly recorded to have studied in the Gaulish school.

Kein geneis canav
 Byd undydd mwyav :
 Lliaws a bwyllav
 Ac a bryderav.
 Cyvarchav veirdd byd—
 Pryd na'm dyweid !
 Py gynheil y byd
 Na seirth yn eissywyd :
 Neu'r byd pei syrthiei
 Py â'r yd gwyddei ?
 Pwy a'i gogynhaliei ?
 Byd mor yw advant !
 Pan syrth yn divant
 Etwa yn geugant.
 Byd mor yw rhyvedd
 Na syrth yn unwedd.
 Byd mor yw odid
 Mor vawr yd sethrid.

“ Though I have sung already, I will sing of the world

* W. Archaiol. p. 25.

“ one day more : much will I reason and meditate. I will “ demand of the Bards of the world.—why will they not “ answer me! What upholds the world, that it falls not,
 “ destitute of support: or, if it were to fall, which way
 “ would it go? Who would sustain it? How great a wan“ derer is the world! Whilst it glides on, without resting,
 “ it is still within its hollow orbit. How wonderful its “ frame, that it does not fall off in one direction! How “ strange, that it is not disturbed by the multitude of “ tramlings!”

Some idle Rhymer has added to the conclusion, that the four evangelists support the world, through the grace of the spirit: but Giraldus Cambrensis complains, that in his age the simple works of the Bards had been disfigured by such modern and ill-placed flourishes.

I have now endeavoured to catch a glimpse of our early Bards as natural philosophers, and have shewn, that they were not less ambitious of the character, than their venerated preceptors, the Druids, are recorded to have been.

Hence I proceed to contemplate the same Bards, and their instructors, in a political light. Through this maze of inquiry, the chair of Glamorgan kindly offers its torch of direction. One of the leading maxims of its Druidical code, as announced to the Public, is a political principle, frequently touched upon, both by Mr. Williams and Mr. Owen, but more fully detailed by the latter.

“ Superiority of individual power is what none, but “ God, can possibly be entitled to; for the power that gave “ existence to all, is the only power that has a claim of “ right to rule over all. A man cannot assume authority “ over another; for if he may over one, by the same rea“ son he may rule over a million, or over a world. All men “ are necessarily equal: the four elements, in their natural “ state, or every thing not manufactured by art, is the “ common property of all.”*

The merit of the doctrine which is here held forth, it is not my province duly to appreciate. I have nothing to do with it, any farther than as it purports to be a principle drawn from the source of Druidism, through the channel of the British Bards.

At the time when this book first appeared, I was not absolutely a novice in the remaining accounts of the Druids, or in the works of the British Bards; yet I must own, that all this was perfectly new to me. I am now, upon farther acquaintancè with the works of our Cambrian progenitors, fully convinced, that they never taught any such thing.

I would therefore advise the partizans of the oracular chair, to reconsider this code of laws, and search, whether this doctrine is to be found in the first copy, which was compiled in the sixteenth century, or only in that copy, which was revised, rectified, and ratified during the great rebellion in the middle of the seventeenth. And if it be found only in the latter, I would ask, was not Druidism, as far as this goes, very popular amongst Britons and Saxons in the age of Cromwell?—Perhaps I wrong that age.

* Introd. to Ll. Hên. p. 54.

The principles here announced, seem to go rather beyond the levellers of the seventeenth century, and to savour strongly of a Druidism which originated in Gaul, and was from thence transplanted into some corners of Britain, not many ages before the year 1792, when the memorial of Bardism made its appearance. It were well, if the sages who prepared that memorial, would revise their extracts, and recal any accidental inaccuracy, that might otherwise mislead future antiquaries. They must know, as well as I do, that this is not the Druidism of history, nor of the British Bards.

Let us hear Cæsar's testimony. The Druids of Gaul, with whom he was intimately acquainted, were supreme judges in all causes, public and private. Every thing bent to their decree. The sacred order, therefore, possessed a pre-eminence of authority over the people, whom they did not acknowledge as their necessary equals. Nor were the Druids upon a level amongst themselves; for we are farther told—* “His omnibus Druidibus præest unus, qui summam “inter eos habet auctoritatem.”

Nor did they deem it unlawful for even temporal princes to enjoy pre-eminence of power. Divitiacus, an accredited Druid, complains of the ingratitude of his brother, Dumnorix, who had been advanced to great authority by the exertion of his influence.

But as the Druids and the princes were generally relations, it may be argued, that they connived at a trifling dereliction of principle in their own families, and contented themselves with moulding the people into a state of perfect equality: which they might have done, had they been so disposed; as the whole community of the nation was formed under their control.

* “Over all these Druids, there is one president, who enjoys supreme authority amongst them.”

Here, then, if any where, we may expect to discover the operation of the great levelling scheme. But here we are farther from the point than ever.—*“ Plebes pœnè “ servorum habetur loco, quæ, per se, nihil audet, et nullo
 “ adhibetur concilio. Plerique cum, aut ære alieno, aut “ magnitudine tributorum, aut injuriâ potentium premun-
 “ tur, sese in servitutem dicant nobilibus. In hos eadem “ omnia sunt jura, quæ dominis in servos.” †

When the Romans came into Britain, where Druidism had also an establishment, they found the insular tribes subject to their respective princes, who had authority, not only to govern during their lives, but also to bequeath their dominions.

It is therefore evident, that individual authority and private property were countenanced under the auspices of Druidism. But was this the case in the times of those Bards, who still exist in their works, and to whom the levelling system has been imputed? Let us ask Taliesin, “ whose poems (according to Mr. Williams) exhibit a complete system of Druidism.” ‡

* “The common people are regarded as nearly upon a level with slaves. They have no power of their own, and are never admitted into the assemblies of the states. Many of these, when oppressed by debt, by the weight of taxes, or by the injury of the great, devote themselves to the service of the nobles, who have, in all respects, the same power over them, which masters have over their slaves.”

† De Bell. Gall. L. VI. c. 13.

‡ Poems, V. II. p. 7.

This venerable Bard thus speaks of the Prince of Reged.*

“ There is superior happiness for the illustrious in fame;
 “ for the liberal in praise—there is superior glory, that “ Urien and his children exist, and that he reigns supreme,
 “ the sovereign Lord.” †

But why should I select quotations? Who, amongst the ancient Bards, was not patronized by princes, whom he has celebrated, not less for the greatness of their power, than for the eminence of their virtues? If either historical authority, or the testimony of the Bards, can have any weight in deciding this question, this curious dogma of the pretended chair has nothing at all to do with Druidism or Bardism. That it is not even countenanced by the ancient Bards, must be known to every man who is conversant in their works.

It therefore rests with the advocates of this chair, to inform us, whether it was introduced into their code by the levellers of the seventeenth century, or fabricated during the late anarchy of France, as a new engine, fit for immediate execution.

I am far from professing myself the general advocate of the Bards, or the Druids; I only wish to exhibit them in their true colours; but I find it impossible to write upon this subject, without vindicating their character from an imputation, as groundless as it is infamous.

* W. Archaïol. p. 31.

† Mr. Turner's Translation. Vindic. p. 137.

Another particular in the traditions of the dictatorial chair, which does not perfectly correspond with the testimony of the ancients relative to the Druids, or with the sentiments and practice of the Bards, is that inviolable attachment to peace, which is ascribed to the whole order.

“ It is necessary to remark (says Mr. Owen), that Llywarch was not a member of the regular order of Bards, for the whole tenor of his life militated against the leading maxims of that system; the groundwork of which was, universal peace, and perfect equality. For a Bard was not to bear arms, nor even to espouse a cause by any other active means; neither was a naked weapon to be held in his presence; he being deemed the sacred character of a herald of peace. And in any of these cases, where the rules were transgressed, whether by his own will, or by the act of another, against him, he was degraded, and no longer deemed one of the order.” *

Here again I suspect, that the president of the chair has not been quite accurate in his notes. I do not recollect to have seen this doctrine, in its full extent, promulgated by any code, before a certain period of the French Revolution, when the meek republicans of Gaul, and their modest partizans in other countries, joined the indefeasible right of equality with the inviolable duty of peace, and impressed them upon the orderly subjects of every state; whilst they themselves were preparing for every species of injury to civil society. But whencesoever this fallacious principle took its rise, it certainly did not belong to the Druids, or to the Bards, without great limitation.

* Introd. to Ll. Hên. p. 18. See also p. 25.

That the former were friends of peace, and seldom engaged in war, is a point which must be admitted. But there were occasions, upon which even the Druids deemed war lawful, and encouraged their disciples to contemn death, and act bravely in the field. Cæsar observes, that an immunity from military service, was amongst the privileges of the Druids; and that it was their general custom to keep aloof from the field of battle. But was this custom grafted upon an inviolable principle? Let us hear. Having mentioned the supreme authority of the Arch-Druid, the historian adds this information. * “Hoc mortuo, si qui ex “reliquis excellit dignitate, succedit. At si sint plures
“pares, suffragio Druidum adlegitur: nonnunquam etiam
“armis de principatu contendunt.”

In these cases, what becomes of their perfect equality? and, in the latter case, of their unconquerable abhorrence of war? Was the whole body of Druids degraded, in consequence of having espoused a cause, and that by the sentence of the president, who owed his elevation to the number and zeal of his party, and to the length of his sword?

If we turn our attention to the British order, we shall find them in the same predicament with their brethren in Gaul. The Druids, who opposed Suetonius on the shores of Mona, and terrified his soldiers with their direful imprecations, not only endured the sight of naked weapons, but vigorously espoused a cause; and it was the same cause for which, as we are told, the venerable Llywarch is to be degraded; namely, the defence of the country against foreign invaders.

* “Upon his death, if any one of the survivors excels the rest in dignity, he succeeds; but if several have equal pretensions, the president is chosen by the votes of the Druids. Sometimes, however, the supreme dignity is disputed by force of arms.”

When we descend to those British Bards, who professed themselves disciples of the Druids, we find a caveat entered against the aged prince above named. He is not to be acknowledged by the order, because he made a noble stand in defence of his patrimony. But what are we to do with Merddin and Ancurin? The former fought manfully in the battle of Arderydd, and the latter saw a multitude of blood-stained weapons in the fatal day of Cattraeth.

Even Taliesin, with his “Complete System of Druidism,” was a decided partizan in the cause of the gallant Urien. He celebrated his victories, and encouraged his military ardour. So far was he from abhorring the sight of a naked sword, when he considered it as justly drawn, that he could deliberately contemplate, and minutely record, the circumstances of the destructive conflict.

Of this, I shall produce a pretty convincing proof in Mr. Owen’s own translation, with which he favoured the public only two years before the appearance of his Llywarch Hên.

“ I saw the fierce contending tumult; where wild destruction raged, and swift flowing streams of blood ran, amidst the half surviving ranks—I saw men, whose path was desolation, with their garments entangled with clot-“ ted gore: quick and furious were their thrusts in the “ long maintained conflict; the rear of the battle had no “ room to fly, when the chief of Reged urged on the pur“ suit.—I am astonished at his daringness,” &c.

And with what sentiment does the Bard conclude his song, after having witnessed this dreadful spectacle? He recommends the pursuit of military glory, even to a lady, and declares his resolution to praise the magnanimous Urien.

“ Mayst thou pant for conflict, O Euronwy! And till I fail with age, and through cruel fate must die, may I not smile with joy, if I sing not the praise of Urien!” *

If Cynvelyn’s Incantation does not rather belong to Aneurin, the same Bard justifies the destruction of the foe; nor does he think his hand polluted, either with the cup or the spear, that carries the mark of slaughter.

“ Fury, in a torrent, shall flow against the Angles.— Slaughter is just! The raven’s due is our heaps of slain! Before the man who is naturally endowed with song, light unfolds the mystery—and, bearing woe, he shall return, his glittering yellow cup, besmeared with gore, hiding the froth of the yellow mead. Satiated with enterprise, his heavy spear, with gold adorned, he bestowed on me. Be it for a benefit to his soul!” †

Such is the genuine language of the Bards; and, agreeable to this language, is the decision of the learned and candid historian, who has done us the honour of vindicating their cause.

“ These Bards were warriors. Their songs commemo-

* Taliesin’s Battle of Gwenystrad. Gent. Mag. March, 1790.

† Gent. Mag. Nov. 1795. Mr. Owen’s translation.

“rate warriors; and their feelings and sentiments are wholly “martial.”*

But is it true, that an abhorrence of weapons, and an inviolate attachment to peace, were established principles, even in the chair of Glamorgan? There are circumstances which seem to imply the contrary.

According to Mr. Owen's list, David ab Gwilym presided in the year 1360. † In a foolish quarrel with Gruffudd Grÿg, this Bard challenges his adversary to decide their dispute with the sword. Gruffudd accepts the challenge, and bids him defiance. Then, indeed, but not till then, the worthy president manifests a disposition for peace. ‡

If the Bards, according to the code of this chair, were never to espouse even a just cause, what becomes of the “Necessary, but reluctant duty of the Bards of the island
“of Britain, to unsheath the sword against the lawless and “depredatory?”§

Or how can the chair reconcile this inviolate principle, with its own practice, of bringing the assault of warfare against a degraded member, unsheathing the sword, calling to him three times, and proclaiming, that the sword was naked

* Mr. Turner's Vindic. p. 207.

† Intro. to Ll. Hên. p. 62.

‡ See D. ab Gwilym's Works, p. 244, &c.

§ This duty is acknowledged by the institutional Triads of that very chair.—Williams's Poems, V. II. p. 232.

*against him?—Surely this manifests a disposition as hostile, as can well be tolerated by the present laws of society.

The few observations upon the novel maxims, and dictatorial tone, of the chair of Glamorgan, which the principle of self-defence have extorted from me, may supply a useful hint to future inquirers into Welsh antiquities. It is not, however, my aim, to pass a general censure upon the traditions of that society. I am willing to suppose, that they would reflect light upon many subjects which are now obscure, were they brought forward, unmingled with modern speculation.

That the particulars here selected, have neither support nor countenance amongst the ancient Bards, or their preceptors, the Druids, I have already shewn. It remains for me to inquire, whether they correspond with the personal character and sentiments of Trahaearn Brydydd Mawr, who is announced as the first president; and consequently, whether it is probable, that he established a society upon such principles.

Under the name of this bold and turbulent genius, we have only two pieces preserved: but they are highly characteristic, and furnish us with some important anecdotes.

Trahaearn appears to have been a free guest in the mansion of Howel of Llan Dingad, in the vale of Towy, about a hundred years after Wales had finally submitted to the English government. Howel's peace establishment, as described by the muse of his Bard, was much in the style of Sir Patrick Rackrent; and, in his heroical capacity, he made some local efforts to assert the independence of his country, in an age when such patriotism could be no longer a virtue.

* Introd. to Ll. Hên. p. 51.

This gentleman's Bard made a Christmas visit to Cadwgan, vicar of Llan Gynog, where, it seems, he met with a scanty and very homely entertainment. His resentment dictated a furious lampoon upon the vicar, his daughter and his son-in-law; in which he declared, that "if the house were burnt upon the eve of the new year, it would be a good riddance; and any shabby wretch might perform a meritorious act, by killing the alien son-in-law with the sword."

Such an outrage might have been treated with merited contempt, had not the vicar's house been actually burnt, and his son-in-law killed upon that very new-year's eve.

This, I presume, was the notorious circumstance which marked the æra of our Bard in the year 1380. Whether Trahaearn himself was, or was not, personally engaged in this atrocious act, does not appear: but his efforts to clear himself in the subsequent poem, prove, at least, the existence of suspicion.

In just abhorrence of his conduct, the incendiary and assassin was disowned by the family of Llan Dingad, and became a necessitous wanderer for a long period. During this season of disgrace, if ever, he presided in the chair of Glamorgan.

In the following poem, we find him labouring to effect a reconciliation with the grandsons of his patron; but with what success, is unknown at present. The reader will pardon my giving a translation of the whole piece, as it constitutes no unfavourable specimen of the Bardism of the fourteenth century.

SUNG, by Trahaearn the great poet, in praise of Howel of Llan Dingad, in the vale of Towy, 1350.*

1. †

A dauntless leader in the conflict, the very energy of heroism, was the valiant Howel; eminently severe in the work of violence; proud and bright as a dragon, directing the death of the foe: and this dragon, I know, will be illustrious in the memorials of his country.

2.

A dismal carnage was seen amongst the people, when the daring hawk gave battle. In equal pace rushed the cataracts of blood, and the incessant spears, during the shock. Woe's my heart, that I remained silent for a single night!

3.

Wider and wider did the groans of nature extend, when

* W. Archaiol. p. 499. The editors have probably inserted 1350, by way of accommodation with the chronology of the chair. The only copy to which they refer, as their original, has the date 1380, which came from the authority of Dr. Davies of Mallwyd, and is the same which is given by Ed. Llwyd, in his Archæologia.

† The places mentioned in this poem, are in the neighbourhood of Llandovery. Llandingad is the parish in which that town is situated. The manor of Hirvryn comprehends part of that parish. Caew, or Cynvil Gaiu, is at the distance of about ten miles, on the Llanbedr road; and Myddvai, which joins the parish of Llandingad, was famous for its succession of physicians, in the family of Rhiwallawn, from the 13th to the 18th century.

the vessel of racking poison poured the pangs of destiny,* whilst he was encouraging his host to protect the vale of Towy, a place which is now desolate, without a chief. To be silent henceforth, is not the act of manhood.

4.

For the Lion, of shivered spears; for the shield of bravery, there is now crying and lamentation, because our hope is removed—the chief with the huge clarions, whose whelming course was like the raging sea. The afflicted host of Lloegr † did he consume in his descent, like the tumultuous flame in the mountain heath. ‡

5.

Though fierce in his valour, like Leon, with a violent, irresistible assault, he vaulted into battle, to plunder the King of Bernicia; § yet the hero of the race of Twedor, the ravager of thrice seven dominions, was a placid and liberal-handed chief, when he entertained the Bards at his magnificent table.

6.

With the rage of Ocean, he raised aloft the shield of the three provinces. His hand was upon the sword, spotted with crimson, and the scabbard adorned with gold. Then had the severe Lion uninterrupted success, in the deadly battle of Caew: the area was filled with terror, and the

* It appears by this passage, that poison had been administered to the warrior, just as he was going to battle.

† England.

‡ It is the custom in many parts of Wales, to burn the heaths upon the mountains, in order to clear the turf, which is paired off, for fuel.

§ Some nobleman, who took his title from a place in the North, or within the limits of ancient Bernicia.

buildings reduced to ashes, as with the wrath of Llyr Llediaith, and the conduct of Cai.*

7.

But the drugs of Myddvai caused the mead banquets to cease within those gates, where energy was cherished by the assiduous friend of Genius, the ruler of battle, the benefactor of strangers, in his ever-open hall—so that now he lives no more—the leader of spearmen, of illustrious race, the arbiter of all the South.

8.

A thousand strains of praise are preparing, as a viaticum, for this gem of heroes, this mighty eagle, by my golden muse: a prudent, a fortunate, an irresistible chief was he, in the tumults of his principality: his spear dispossessed the aliens; for he was the foe of slavery.

9.

To him be awarded, by the righteous Judge, the patrimony of paradise, in the land of the blessed—a portion which has been prepared (and the only portion which violence cannot remove) by the favour of HIM, who presides over the pure, and the perfect in faith!

10.

And may the God who beholds secrets, the supreme supporter of princes, and the all-knowing Son of Mary, cause, by his pure good will, by the visible and speedy endowment of his sincere favour, that Howel's chief Bard, after his being long disowned,

* Heroes of ancient fable, who will be mentioned again in the course of this Essay.

11.

May remain with his generous grandsons, the objects of the wanderer's vows! Though dreadful in battle, was the blade of Einion the judge? yet was he a golden president in his district, an entertainer of the Muses, in the great sanctuary of the children of panegyric—the supporter of thousands.

12.

I will not dissemble. As it is my privilege to judge, I will declare my sentiment, that no wayward lampoon shall sport with the great renown of the hero; and, that I shall not be found in the company, or in the form of an outlaw, or without a pledge of inviolable faith towards the clergy.

13.

I am blameless, and entitled to the peace of the plough, the general and free boon of the warrior, according to the established and sincere decree of the great, unerring Father, the love-diffusing Lord, the supreme dispenser of light, 14.

I will relate (and the tribute of love will I send forth) a golden tale, a canon of the natural delineation of the muse for my tribe: and this with joy will I do, to prevent the colouring of falsehood, till the spring of my genius be gone, with the messenger that calls me hence.

15.

For want of the discretion to compose good words, I have lost the incessant invitation to the cauldrons, and the munificent banquets of the land of eloquence, and generous horns of delicious liquor, amongst the mighty pillars of battle, whose hands brandish the glittering sword.

16.

Wretched is he, whose lot it has been to lose the mead and the wine, that flow to the frequenters of those halls, which are liberal to every claimant; and the frank invitations, and the presents, of those Dragon chiefs, who pour forth thy precious showers, O vale of Towy!

17.

Every night is my grief renewed with the thought, that by the violence of one rash transgression, I have forfeited the valuable privilege, and lost the protecting power of the supporter of the splendid host, the hero, of the seed of Merwin.—Of his sparkling wine, and his scarlet, I partake no more!

18.

Yet still, with due and lasting praise, shall be celebrated the munificent shower of the hawks of Hirvryn, the last of that warlike race, which derives its blood from the line of the slaughterer; and my eagle, the leader of the embattled spearmen, of the district of Dingad.

He who peruses this poem, must be immediately convinced, that the feelings and sentiments of Trahaearn are utterly irreconcilable with the principles, which he is represented as having taught. The Bard is neither shocked at the exertion of military spirit, nor backward in espousing the cause of his country and his patron, as well as of his own appetite. And here is not a syllable that countenances the doctrine of perfect equality.

As I shall have occasion to mention the nocturnal mysteries of the Bards, I must just take notice of another dogma of the boasted chair, which asserts, *that the Bards did every thing in the eye of the light, and in the face of the sun; and, that none of their meetings could be holden, but in a conspicuous place, whilst the sun was above the horizon.

As this unqualified publicity is referred to the principles and practice of the Druids, it must stagger the confidence of those who have been accustomed to contemplate the awful secrets of the grove, and the veil of mystery which was thrown over the whole institution,

The annual, or quarterly sessions of the Druids, where they sat, † in loco consecrato, to hear and decide causes, may have been held in a conspicuous place, and by day: and thus much may be inferred, from their mounts of assembly; but what regarded their internal discipline, and the mysteries of their religion, was certainly conducted with greater privacy.

“ † Docent multa, nobilissimos gentis,” says P. Mela, “ § clam, et diu, vicenis annis, in specu, aut in abditis saltibus. || And their effectual regard to secrecy, is forcibly pointed out, by what the author immediately adds

* See Owen's Introd. to Ll. Hên, p. 27, 48. Also, Williams's Poems, V. II. p. 39, note, and p. 216.

† In a consecrated place.

‡ “ They give lessons upon a variety of subjects, to the first nobility of the nation.”

§ “ These lessons are private, and continued for a long time—for the space of twenty years, in a cave, or amongst inaccessible forests.”

|| Lib. III. c. 2.

—“*UNUM ex iis, quæ præcipiunt, in vulgus effluxit.”—
The attentive ear of curiosity had been able to catch but •one of their institutional Triads.

Cæsar also mentions the solicitude of the Druids, lest their discipline should be exposed to public view: and their religious meetings, though covered by the inaccessible grove, were holden in the night, as well as at noon.

“ † Medio cum Phœbus in axe est,
Aut Cœlum nox atra tenet.” ‡

With all this, the celebration of the nightly mysteries, described in the chair of Taliesin, his Ogov Gorddewin, Cave, or Specus of the Arch-Diviner, the torches of Ceridwen, which flamed at midnight, and at the dawn, together with Merddin's concealment in the Caledonian forest, perfectly accord.

I shall close my preliminary section, when I have brought the Bards into one more point of comparison with their venerable instructors, the Druids.

This ancient order of men does not recommend itself to our notice, merely as teachers of a false philosophy, or presidents of a gloomy superstition.

• One of the maxims which they teach, has found its way to the Public.

† “When the sun is in the middle of his course, or when the dark night
“covers the sky.”

‡ Lucan, Pharsal, Lib. III.

“The Druids were remarkable for justice, moral and religious doctrines, and skill in the laws of their country: for which reason, all disputes were referred to their arbitration; and their decision, whether relating to private and domestic, or public and civil affairs, was final.”*

Mela, speaking of the three nations of Gallia Cornata, says—“† Habent facundiam suam, magistrosque sapientiæ, Druidas.” ‡

Sotion, in Libro successionum, confirmat, Druidas, divini; humanique Juris, peritissimos fuisse. §

The learned Mr. Whitaker regards the three first books of the Laws of Howel, as comprising the Laws of the Ancient Britons. And the Manksmen ascribe to the Druids, those excellent laws, by which the Isle of Man has always been governed. ||

Whether these decisions be allowed in a full, or only in a qualified sense, they seem utterly incompatible with the doctrine of that chair, which admits of a continual lapse in religious principles, the only real foundation of laws and of morals; which disallows the existence of human authority, and insists upon an equality so absolute, as to preclude all just subordination, and established order in society.

* Borlase, B. II. ch. 16, from Strabo, Lib. IV.

† “They have an eloquence of their own, and their Druids as teachers of wisdom.”

‡ Lib. III. c. 2.

§ Lel. de Script. Brit. p. 5.

|| See Carte's Hist. p. 46.

That admirable Triad, recorded by Diogenes Laertius, as a leading principle of the Druids, is of a complexion very different from this. It recommends piety towards the Deity, innocence in our intercourse with mankind, and the exercise of fortitude in the personal character: and hence it prepares us to look for something of value in their moral instructions.

And as the Bards profess to have drawn all their doctrines from the Druidical fountain, I think, there is no subject which ascertains the authenticity of their pretensions better, than that of moral instruction, and the study of human nature. Their lessons of this kind, however, are generally comprised in short and pithy aphorisms.

Amongst the most curious remains of the old Bards, we may class those metrical sentences, called tribanau, or triplets. Each of these is divided into three short verses, which are again united by the final rhymes.

The most singular feature of these versicles is, that the sense of the two first verses has no obvious connection with that of the last. The first line contains some trivial remark, suggested by the state of the air, the season of the year, the accidental meeting of some animal, or the like. To this is frequently subjoined, something that savours more of reflection; then the third line comes home to the heart, with a weighty moral precept, or a pertinent remark upon men and manners. My meaning will be best explained by a few examples.

Eiry mynydd—gwangus Iâr—
 Gochwiban gwynt ar dalar—
 Yn yr ing gorau yw'r Câr.

“ Snow of the mountain! the bird is ravenous for food—“ Keen whistles the blast on the headland—In distress, the “ friend is most valuable!”

Glaw allan, yngan clydwr—
 Melyn eithin! crin evwr!—
 Duw Rheen, py beraist lywvr!

“ It rains without, and here is a shelter—What! the “ yellow furze, or the rotten hedge! Creating God! why
 “ hast thou formed the slothful!”

Y ddeilen a dreyd Gwynt*—
 Gwae hi o'i thynged—
 Hên hi! eleni y ganed!

“ The leaf is tossed about by the wind—
 “ Alas, how wretched is fate!—
 “ It is old! But, this year was it born!”

I seem already to perceive a smile upon the countenance of the critical reader. The force of the concluding maxim, or the depth of reflection, and accuracy of remark, which it evinces, will hardly protect our Druidical lectures from the charge of puerile conceit. I do not bring forward our British Doctors as men of the highest polish, or most accurate taste. But let us consider, if any thing can be said in their defence.

Some praise must be due to the ingenuity of a device, which was calculated, through the rudeness of ancient

* The true reading seems to be—

Y ddeilen-gwynt a'i threued.

British society, to lead the mind, imperceptibly, from a trivial remark upon the screaming of hungry birds, the state of the weather, or a dry leaf tossed about by the wind, to the contemplation of moral truth, or to pertinent reflection upon the state of man. And these triplets, which the people learned by rote, were peculiarly adapted to produce such a salutary effect.

For the introductory objects of remark, being of the most familiar kind, were daily before their eyes: and their very occurrence would naturally suggest those maxims and reflections, which the memory had already connected with them. A nation wholly unrefined, and which, at best, had but a scanty supply of books, and those in few hands, must have found the benefit of this mode of instruction. Whatever page of nature was presented to their view, their teachers had contrived to make it a page of wisdom.

Let us apply this observation to the examples which I have given. The appearance of snow upon the hills, or of hungry and screaming birds, suggests the remark—"There is snow upon the mountain; the bird screams for food." With this, the memory connects the second clause, describing a cold and dreary season, in which man, as well as the wild fowl, probably felt distress. "Keen whistles the blast on the headland." Then the third clause, drawn by the chain of memory, comes home to the bosom, and excites a feeling suitable to such a season. "In distress, the friend is most valuable." As if his heart had commanded him—"Now go, and perform the most sacred of social duties—relieve thy distressed friend."

So, in the second triplet, a man who has neglected his duty or his business, to indulge an indolent habit, is reminded, by a sprinkling shower, of the trivial remark—

 “It rains without, but here is a shelter.” He then recollects—“What, the yellow furze, or the rotten hedge!”
 And is ashamed of his indolence. This feeling is immediately strengthened by the emphatical reflection—“Creating God! why hast thou formed the slothful!”

The emblem of the shortness and frailty of human life;
 in the third example, is sufficiently obvious.

I shall subjoin a few more translated specimens of Celtic ethics.

“It is the eve of winter—social converse is pleasant—
 “The gale and the storm keep equal pace—To preserve a “secret, is the part of the skilful (Celvydd).”

“It is the eve of winter. The stags are lean—the tops
 “of the birch are yellow: deserted is the summer dwelling
 “—Woe to him who, for a trifling advantage, merits “disgrace.”

“Though it be small, yet ingenious is the bird’s fabric
 “in the skirt of the wood—The virtuous and the lappy
 “are of equal age.”

“Chill and wet is the mountain—Cold is the grey ice—
 “Trust in God; he will not deceive thee; nor will perse“vering patience leave thee long in affliction.”

“It rains without; the brake is drenched with the shower
 “—The sand of the sea is white with its crown of foam—
 “Patience is the fairest light for man.”

“ Snow of the mountain! bare is the top of the reed—
 “ The man of discretion cannot associate with the silly—
 “ Where nothing has been learned, there can be no ge“ nius.”

“ Snow of the mountain! the fish are in the shallow “ stream—The lean, crouching stag seeks the shady glen—
 “ God will prosper the industry of man.”

“ Snow of the mountain! the birds are tame—The dis“ creetly happy needs only to be born—God himself cannot “ procure good for the wicked.”

Though it be admitted, that this method of teaching moral wisdom, was continued by the Britons for some time after the introduction of Christianity, yet I think, for several reasons, that this singular mode of classing the ideas, was derived from the school of the Druids; and that several of the triplets, still extant, have descended from their times.

The sentences are divided into three members each; and three was a sacred and mystical number amongst the Druids.

The metre is also the most ancient, of which the Welsh have any tradition. And it does not appear from history, that the Britons could have borrowed the model of such composition from any nation with which they were connected, since the period of the Roman conquest.

The plan of these triplets has that mixture of rude simplicity, and accurate observation, which history ascribes to the Druids. Here, the barbaric muse appears in her rustic dress, without a single ornament of cultivated taste.

This sententious way of writing has, for many centuries, become obsolete amongst the Welsh. Nothing of this character is found in those Bards who have written since the Norman conquest. Even the metre has scarcely been used since the time of Llywarch Hên, in the sixth century. Taliesin and Aneurin seem to have rejected it as antiquated, and too simple and unadorned.

The introduction of this style of philosophizing, was certainly long before the time of any known Bard, whose works are now extant. For in our oldest poems, we find several of these maxims detached from their connection, and used as common-place aphorisms. And moreover, the very same aphorisms, as being now public property, are employed, without scruple, by several contemporary Bards, though the simple form of the triplet had been generally laid aside.

Beside the triplets here described, there are certain moral stanzas, of six or eight lines each, consisting of detached sentences, connected only by the final rhymes, and each stanza beginning with Eiry Mynydd, Snow of the Mountain. These seem to be nothing more than metrical arrangements of aphorisms, taken from ancient triplets. The two first are as follows : *

“ Snow of the mountain! troublesome is the world!

* Twelve of these are ascribed to Mervin Gwawdrydd, whose age is unknown, unless it be a corrupt reading for Aneurin Gwawdrydd; and nineteen bear the name of a son of Llywarch Hên.

“ No man can foretel the accidents to which wealth is exposed. Arrogance will not arrive at a state of security.
 “ Prosperity often comes after adversity. Nothing endures
 “ but for a season. To deceive the innocent, is utterly dis“ graceful. No man will ever thrive by vice. On God “ alone let us place our dependence.”

“ Snow of the mountain! white is the horn of smoke.
 “ The thief is in love with darkness. Happy is the man “ who has done no evil. The froward is easily allured to “ do mischief. No good befalls the lascivious person. An “ old grudge often ends in a massacre. A fault is most “ conspicuous in a prince. Give less heed to the ear, than “ to the eye.”

The following are amongst the aphorisms of the other stanzas.

“ A noble descent is the most desolate of widows, unless “ it be wedded to some eminent virtue.”

“ In contending with direful events, great is the resource
 “ of human reason.”

“ The most painful of diseases, is that of the heart.”

“ The leader of the populace is seldom long in office.”

“ For the ambitious, the limits of a kingdom are too
 “ narrow.”

“ The blessing of competency is not inferior to that of “ abundance.”

“ When the hour of extravagance is spent, that of indigence succeeds.”

“ Many are the friends of the golden tongue.”

“ Beware of treating any thing with contempt.”

“ Obstruct not the prospect of futurity, to provide for the present.”

“ Pride is unseemly in a ruler.”

“ The virgin’s best robe is her modesty; but confidence is graceful in a man.”

“ Freely acknowledge the excellence of thy betters.”

“ A useful calling is more valuable than a treasure.”

“ Like a ship in the midst of the sea, without rope, or sail or anchor, is the young man who despises advice.”

The stanzas of the months, ascribed to Aneurin, are entitled to some notice, as containing a singular mixture of moral and physical remarks. Thus, for example.

“ In the month of April, thin is the air upon the heights.
 “ The oxen are weary. Bare is the surface of the ground.
 “ The guest is entertained, though he be not invited. The stag looks dejected. Playful is the hare. Many are the faults of him who is not beloved.* Idleness is unworthy of the healthy. Shame has no place on the cheek

* Or, Who has no friend.

“ of the upright. Desolation awaits the children of the unjust. After arrogance, comes a long abasement.”

The Viaticum of Llevoed, a Bard of the tenth century, is the most modern production of any known author in this aphoristical style. I give the following specimens.

“ Wealth of the world! let it go; let it come! Be it disposed of as it may. A state of anxiety is upon a level with real penury. Serenity will succeed, when the rain is over.”

“ Amongst the children of the same nursery, equality is seldom found: the brave will play, whilst his blood is flowing about him: the submissive will be trampled upon: the fierce will be avoided: the discreet is in covenant with prosperity; to him, God pours forth his bounty.”

“ Confidence in noble blood, is like the billow that meets the shore: whilst we are calling out—Lo there! it has already subsided,”

“ Incurious is the man who observes not—who, though he regard it unmoved, does not consider what may happen hereafter.”

“ Woe to the land where there is no religion !”

“ The man who disbelieves a God, is incapable of reason.”

“ The man who breaks the unity of society, is the blemish of the assembly, the affliction of the womb that bare him, the detestation of the country.”

“ Even in an act of profusion, have regard to economy.”

“ A profession is calculated for society; a treasure-bag
“ for banishment.”

“ The founding of a city, is the ruin of a desert.”

A complete collection of the adages and moral maxims, preserved in the Welsh language, would fill a considerable volume. Hence it appears, that the application of the Bards to moral science, as well as the other pursuits of their genius, justifies their pretensions to the lore of the ancient Druids.

SECTION II.

General View of Druidical Theology—Character and Rites of HU, the Helio-Arkite God—the Bacchus of the heathen Britons.

IN the introductory section of this Essay, I have brought home the profession of Druidism to the ancient Welsh Bards; and, by a collation of several of the topics upon which they expiate, with classical authorities, have proved the justice of their claim to that character which they assume. I have also shewn, that the mythological Triads are founded in genuine British tradition; and that the notices which these documents present, are, for the most part, consistent with the works of those Bards, who profess themselves disciples of the Druids.

From these authentic remains of British lore, I shall now endeavour to deduce such a general view of the theology and rites of our heathen ancestors, as the nature and extent of these documents will admit of. To attempt a complete investigation of every minute part of this subject, and to prepare myself to answer every question that may be asked, is not in my contemplation. This would be imposing upon myself a task, difficult in execution, and, perhaps, not very gratifying to the Public in its accomplishment. The hardy antiquary, who shall dare to penetrate far into the labyrinth of British mythology, will have frequent occasion to complain of the interruption of his clue, and the defect of monuments, amongst our half Christian Bards. Yet the same Bards furnish hints abundantly sufficient, to point out in what the Druidical superstition chiefly consisted, and from what foundation it arose. And this seems to be all that can be interesting or important in the subject before us.

As I would willingly qualify my reader, to satisfy his own curiosity, and form his own opinion, independent of mine, I shall suffer no assertion of moment to intrude upon him, without a full exhibition of the passage upon which it is grounded. This seems requisite in the present case. Were my evidence to be drawn from the writers of Greece and Rome, or from well-known authors of modern times, it might be sufficient to cite books, chapters, and verses. But as Cambro-British documents are less accessible to the learned, I deem it expedient to produce the original words of my authors, with close English translations. Such authorities will be occasionally introduced, where the subject calls for them. As several of the ancient poems, however, are of a miscellaneous nature, upon which various remarks will arise, I have thrown a collection of them together, as an Appendix, and I shall refer to them as they are numbered.

Before I enter upon the discussion, it may be proper to apprise my reader, of the general deductions I make from these documents, respecting the nature and source of the Druidical superstition, that he may have a clear prospect of the point at which I mean to arrive, and be better enabled to judge of my progress towards it.

Druidism, then, as we find it in British documents, was a system of superstition, composed of heterogeneous principles. It acknowledges certain divinities, under a great variety of names and attributes. These divinities were, originally, nothing more than deified mortals, and material objects; mostly connected with the history of the deluge: but in the progress of error, they were regarded as symbolized by the sun, moon, and certain stars, which, in consequence of this confusion, were venerated with divine honours.

And this superstition apparently arose, from the gradual or accidental corruption of the patriarchal religion, by the abuse of certain commemorative honours, which were paid to the ancestors of the human race, and by the admixture of Sabian idolatry.

Such is the general impression, that the study of ancient British writings leaves upon my mind. This view, I am aware, differs from the opinion maintained by some respectable authors, that the Druids acknowledged the unity of God.*

If ever they made such a profession, they must be understood in the sense of other heathens, who occasionally declared, that their multitude of false gods really constituted but one character; and not as implying, that they worshipped the true God, and him alone. X

That they had no knowledge or recollection of the GREAT FIRST CAUSE, I will not venture to assert. I have some reason to conclude, that they did acknowledge his existence, and his providence; but they saw him faintly, through the thick veil of superstition, and their homage and ado-

* See Antiq. of Cornwall, p. 107.

(N. S.)

ration were almost wholly engrossed by certain supposed agents, of a subordinate nature. —

And the view of this subject, presented by the Bards, is consistent with history. Cæsar, in his deliberate and circumstantial account of the Druids, gives us this information. “ Multa—* de Deorum immortalium vi, ac potestate, “ disputant, et juventuti tradunt. Deum maxime Mercurium colunt—hunc omnium inventorem artium ferunt “ —post hunc, Apollinem, et Martem, et Jovem, et Minervam. De his eandem ferè, quam reliquæ gentes, habent opinionem,” &c.

This memorial was drawn up, after the historian had enjoyed a long and intimate acquaintance with Divitiacus, one of the principal of the order in Gaul; and after his repeated expeditions into Britain, where the institution was affirmed to have originated, and where it was observed with superior accuracy in his time. Testimonies so precise and minute, coming from a writer thus circumstanced, must imply a considerable degree of publicity in this part of the Druidical doctrine. The priests of Gaul and Britain acknowledged a plurality of divinities, and maintained opinions respecting them, which were the same, in substance, with those of the Greeks and Romans.

The gravity and dignity of our author’s character, the pointed precision of his language, together with the peculiar access to accurate information, which his situation of

* They dispute largely concerning the force and power of the immortal gods, and instruct the youth in their principles. Of all the gods, they pay the greatest honours to Mercury, whom they represent as the inventor of all arts. After him, they worship Apollo, and Mars, and Jupiter, and Minerva. Their opinion respecting these, nearly coincides with that of other nations, &c.

ferred, must place his testimony above the reach of critical objection.

Some allowance, however, may be demanded, for the force of the qualifying particle, ferè; and the whole passage may be understood as implying, that the similarity between the Celtic and the Roman superstition, was such, as to give Cæsar a general impression of their identity; and such as may furnish us with an argument, that they originally sprung from the same source; though the gods of the Druids may not have exactly corresponded with those of the Greeks or Romans, in their pedigree, their names, or their attributes.

The Druidical corresponded with the general superstition, not only in its theology, but also in the ceremonies by which the gods were worshipped. Dionysius informs us, that the rites of Bacchus were duly celebrated in the British islands:* and Strabo cites the authority of Artemidorus, that, “In an island close to Britain, Ceres and Proserpine are venerated, with rites similar to the orgies of Samothrace.”†

As it is, then, an historical fact, that the mythology and the rites of the Druids were the same, in substance, with those of the Greeks and Romans, and of other nations which came under their observation, it must follow, that these superstitions are reducible to the same principles, and that they proceeded from the same source.

And here our British documents point, with clearness and

* Perieg. V. 565, &c.

† Lib. IV.

energy, to the very same conclusions, which have been drawn by the best scholars, and most able antiquaries, who have treated of general mythology.

Mr. Bryant, the great analyzer of heathen tradition, has, with luminous ability, traced the superstition of the Gentiles to the deification of Noah, his ark, and his immediate progeny, joined with the idolatrous worship of the host of heaven.

With a dutiful regard to his illustrious master, though superior to servile imitation, Mr. Faber pursues the investigation still farther, and discovers, that Noah was worshipped in conjunction with the sun, and the ark in conjunction with the moon; and that these were the principal divinities of the heathens. With this author's mysteries of the Cabiri, I was wholly unacquainted, at the time when I drew up the present Essay; but I found in this book so many points of coincidence with my previous observations, that I determined to revise the whole, to alter a few paragraphs, and add occasional notes.

That the opinion of the Public is not uniformly favourable to these authors, I am fully aware.

Some critics, taking a distant and prospective view of the subject, pronounce it an improbable hypothesis, that all antiquity should be so mad after Noah and the ark; whilst others, finding that the authors indulge in a fanciful system of etymology, coldly remark upon the fallacy of such a principle, and toss the books aside, as unworthy of farther notice. But surely it may be presumed, that those who thus condemn them in the mass, had either too much prejudice, or too little patience, to go step by step over the ground. Men of learning and genius may have been seduced, by a favourite system, into minute and particular errors and absurdities; and yet, the main scope of their argument may be perfectly just, and their general conclusions founded in truth.

In the supposition, that Noah was a principal object of superstition to the Gentile world, I can discover no absurdity a priori. It is admitted, that some, at least, of the heathen gods were nothing more than deified mortals, and that the worship of such gods was introduced very soon after the age of Noah. It is then natural to presume, that this distinguished person must have been the first object of selection, in consequence of his relative situation, as the universal king of the world, and the great patriarch of all the infant nations. To this, some weight may be added, from his character and history, as the Just Man, whose integrity preserved himself and his family amidst the ruins of a perishing world. And this superstition being once set on foot, would naturally extend its honours to his sons and immediate descendants, as the founders of their respective nations.

So again it is easy to conceive, that even in the age of Noah, the ark was commemorated with great respect, as the means of miraculous preservation; and that a growing superstition soon seized upon it, as an object of idolatrous worship; or else, represented that Providence, which had guided it in safety, through the tumult of a boundless deluge, as a benign goddess, the Genius of the sacred vessel.

Just so the brazen serpent, set up by Moses in the wilderness, was adored by the idolatrous Israelites*—just so, the Cross and the Virgin Mary are at this day abused by the church of Rome.

There is, therefore, no absurdity in the grounds of the hypothesis, which can be allowed to militate against the clear deduction of facts.

The scheme of etymology, it must be owned, has been carried to great lengths by these learned authors: and here, I think, they often lay themselves open to the censure of men, whose genius and attainments are greatly inferior to their own.

The Greeks having admitted, that many of the terms connected with their superstition were of foreign origin, and some writers having asserted, that the language of the mysteries was that of Egypt, or of Assyria, these mythologists undertake to retrace the sacred terms of heathenism, to the fountain from whence they sprung. With this view, each of them has selected a list of ancient primitives from various languages, but chiefly from the Hebrew and its dialects. Into these primitives, they resolve the sacred terms of all nations. The names of gods, heroes, &c. which, to the ordinary scholar, appear nothing more than plain Greek or Latin, are all referred to this mystic vocabulary. Hence arises an occasion of charging the Greeks with the gross perversion of sacred titles and symbols, and the puerile corruption of foreign words, into something of similar sound in their own idiom, but of very different import from the original tradition; and hence the magisterial practice of carrying them back, in disjointed syllables, to their supposed originals.

* 2 Kings, ch. xviii. v. 4.

This has given offence to many critical readers, who maintain, that by such a mode of proceeding, any common word may be forced into whatever meaning the author pleases. How far such a scheme of etymology may be allowed, I shall not pretend to determine. At the same time, I must acknowledge that, in my apprehension, these gentlemen have made an injudicious, as well as an intemperate use of it. Proofs of this kind seldom amount to demonstration. They give the reader too many occasions of hesitating, or of differing in opinion from his author; and thus tend to lessen that confidence, which might otherwise have been preserved by the legitimate argument, and the candid exposition of recorded facts, which are to be found in the works before us.

Could I give an unqualified assent to the justice of these etymologies, yet, in my present subject, I should not be able to reduce them to general practice. For though most of the sacred terms, employed in the British documents, have meanings appropriate to the business in hand, and should therefore be translated, yet by far the greatest part of them are native terms of the British language, and have the same import with the corresponding terms in Greek mythology.

Were I then to admit, that the Greek terms are nothing more than etymological blunders, I must also infer that the Britons, who furnish us with the very same blunders in their own dialect, derived their mythology immediately from the Greeks: but I have some reason to believe that this was not the case.

In the mystic Bards and tales, I find certain terms, which evidently pertain to the Hebrew language, or to some dialect of near affinity; as Adonai, the Lord; Al Adur, the Glorious God; Arawn, the Arkite, and the like.

Taliesin, the chief Bard, declares, that his lore had been detailed in Hebraic;* and in a song, the substance of which he professes to have derived from the sacred Ogdoad, or Arkites, there are several lines together in some foreign dialect, apparently of great affinity with the Hebrew, though obscured by British orthography. † Hence I think it probable, that the Britons once had certain mystic poems, composed in some dialect of Asia; that this is a fragment of those poems; and that those parts of their superstition, which were not properly Celtic, were derived from that quarter of the globe. And if so, our ancestors could not have obtained their sacred vocabulary, by adopting the mere grammatical blunders of the Greeks.

Thus I am compelled to decline any general assistance from the derivations of our learned mythologists. At the same time, I shall not scruple to remark occasional coincidences between British terms, and those which appear in their works. This, I trust, I may do with impunity. If some of their etymologies are forced or doubtful, others may be natural, and well founded.

Thus far I have deemed it prudent to meet the objections of criticism. Should this compromise prove unsatisfactory, I must farther declare, that the basis of my argument does not rest upon the works of these authors. I cite them only for collateral proof, or elucidation of the evidence which I draw from another source; and, for the purpose of verifying the report of history, that the superstition of the Druids was radically the same with that of other nations. In my attempt to establish my main proposition, I mean to stand or fall upon my own ground.

* See Appendix, No, 13.

† Ibid. No. 12.

And to this end I must, first of all, produce evidence, that the people who professed Druidism, retained some memorials of the deluge, and of the patriarch of the new world.

The subject has already been touched upon in the volume which I lately published. I there remarked a curious record in the British Triads, of an awful event, namely, The bursting forth of the Lake of Llion, and the overwhelming of the face of all lands; so that all mankind were drowned, excepting Dwyvan and Dwyvach, who escaped in a naked vessel (or a vessel without sails), and by whom the island of Britain was repopled.

To this I subjoined a tradition, taken from the same documents, of the Master-works, or great achievements of the Island of Britain. The first of these was, *Building the ship of Nevydd Nâv Neivion, which carried in it a male and a female of every animal species, when the Lake of Llion burst forth: and the second was, The drawing of the Avanc to land, out of the lake, by the oxen of Hu Gadarn, so that the lake burst no more.

These are evident traditions of the deluge; and their locality, as well as their other peculiarities, furnishes sufficient proof, that they must have been ancient national traditions. Such memorials as these cannot be supposed to have originated in the perversion of the sacred records, during any age subsequent to the introduction of Christianity. The contrary appears, from their whimsical discrepancy with historical fact.

* See Celt. Res. p. 157, from Archæology of Wales, V. II. p. 59, and 71.

The Britons, then, had a tradition of a deluge, which had overwhelmed all lands; but this deluge, according to them, was occasioned by the sudden bursting of a lake. One vessel had escaped the catastrophe: in this a single man and woman were preserved; and as Britain and its inhabitants were, in their estimation, the most important objects in the world, so we are told, that this island, in an especial manner, was re-peopled by the man and woman who had escaped. This has no appearance of having been drawn from the record of Moses: it is a mere mutilated tradition, such as was common to most heathen nations.

So again, the Britons had a tradition, that a vessel had been provided, somewhere or other, to preserve a single family, and the race of animals, from the destruction of a deluge; but they possessed only a mutilated part of the real history: and, as tradition positively affirmed, that their own ancestors were concerned in the building of this vessel, they naturally ascribed the achievement to that country, in which their progenitors had been settled from remote antiquity. And lastly, they had a tradition, that some great operating cause protected the world from a repetition of the deluge. They had lost sight of the true history, which rests this security upon the promise of the supreme Being, and ascribed it to the feat of a yoke of oxen, which drew the avanc, or beaver, out of the lake.

And the want of more accurate information gave them an opportunity of placing this ideal achievement in the island of Britain.

In such tales as these, we have only the vestiges of heathenism. Even the locality of British tradition is exactly similar to that of other heathen reports. To give one instance.

The flood of Deucalion was undoubtedly the flood of Noah. It is described by Greek and Latin writers, with circumstances which apply exclusively to this event. There never has been another deluge, which could have borne a vessel to the top of a lofty mountain, and which destroyed the whole human race, excepting those who were preserved in that vessel. Yet the Thessalians represented Deucalion, the person preserved, as one of their own princes, and affirmed, that the vessel which escaped the deluge, rested upon the top of Parnassus, a mountain of their own country.

It may be remarked, that upon their popular tradition of the deluge, the Britons grounded another national error. They represented the Cymry as having descended from one mother (the woman who disembarked from the sacred ship), within this island, or, in other words, that this was the cradle of the Cymry nation. And it appears from Cæsar, that the Britons of his age, in the interior of this island, had the very same ancient tradition or memorial. *Britanniæ pars interior ab iis incolitur, quos natos in insulâ ipsâ, MEMORIA PRODITUM dicunt.

H

* De Bell. Gal. L. V. c. 12.

But the mass of heathen tradition is always found to have some degree of inconsistency with itself. Some circumstance of true history, which is disguised in one tale, is frequently let out in another. Thus I have remarked a tradition in the same Triads, which brings the Cymry under the conduct of Hu, from a place called Defrobani, in the land of Háv; and this is understood to imply the neighbourhood of Constantinople, in the eastern part of Thrace. The former may have been the popular tradition of the interior Britons, or what their teachers thought proper to inculcate to the multitude; whilst the latter belonged to those who had preserved a few more vestiges of ancient history. And that this had been the route of the Cymry, in their progress out of Asia into Britain, is incidentally confirmed by the popular tradition of the Britons respecting the deluge. For though the memory of this event was almost universal, yet the traditions of every people upon this subject, had some circumstances which were local, or nationally discriminative. And the tradition of Britons, and of the Samothracians, as to the cause of the deluge, were precisely the same.

The British tradition tells us, that the waters of a lake burst forth, and the inundation covered the face of all lands. The same tale was told in the ancient Samos, which was, perhaps, the S'Hâm of British mythology.

“ Samothrace is famous for a deluge which inundated the “ country, and reached the very top of the mountains.
 “ This inundation, which happened before the age of the “ Argonauts, was owing to the sudden overflow of the waters
 “ of the Euxine, which the ancients considered merely as a “ lake.”*

* Lempriere Bib. Class. V. Samothracia.

That the perversion of real history, in both these accounts, is precisely the same, must be obvious to every one. Such a peculiar coincidence could not have happened, without direct communication: and the tradition could not have become national, without having been brought by a colony from one nation to another, and preserved without interruption. But the mythology of Samothrace mounts up to a very remote æra of antiquity, and the Euxine, in its neighbourhood, with its wide extent, and narrow outlet, furnishes a more probable occasion for such a tale, than any lake in the neighbourhood of Britain. Hence the supposition, that this mythological story came with a colony from the region contiguous to the ancient Samos into Britain, agreeably to the memorial of our ancestors, and the tale of Hu, seems much more plausible, than the converse of that proposition. And here the testimony of Artemidorus, that the mysteries of Ceres and Proserpine were celebrated in one of the British islands, with the same rites as in Samothrace, tends to corroborate the inference which I draw from our national tradition.

The allusions to the deluge, in British mythology, come under various points of view. On a former occasion,* I referred the history of Dylan Ail Môr, Dylan, Son of the Sea, or Ail Ton, Son of the Wave, to this event. But in looking over Mr. Owen's Cambrian Biography, a volume which appeared whilst my book was in the press, I observe, that the author is of a different opinion, which he thus expresses.

“ Dylan ail Ton, a chieftain who lived about the begin-

H 2

* Celt. Res. p. 163.

“ning of the sixth century, whose elegy, composed by “ Taliesin, is preserved in the Welsh Archaiology.”

As Mr. Owen grounds his opinion upon this elegy, I shall examine its contents. In the mean time, I may be allowed, in support of my own assertion, to bring forward a few passages, in which this name occurs. I shall leave the result with the reader.

Taliesin, in his Cad Goddeu,* speaks thus of Dylan—

“ Truly I was in the ship
“ With Dylan, Son of the Sea,
“ Embraced in the centre,
“ Between the Royal knees,
“ When, like the rushing of hostile spears,
“ The floods came forth,
“ From Heaven, to the great deep.”

This passage surely has an evident allusion to the deluge. The Bard, therefore, must have regarded Dylan as no other than the patriarch who survived that catastrophe, and whom he justly styles Teyrnedd, or Royal, as being the universal monarch of the new world.

So again, in his Mabgyvreu, † the same Bard alludes to the British tradition of the deluge, and speaks of the day of Dylan, as a peculiar theme of his muse.

Arall ni chân—wyd
Dy ysgwyd allan,

* W. Archaïol. p. 30.

† Ibid. p. 24.

Pan yw gofaran—twrwf
 Tonneu wrth lan,
 Yn nial Dylan;
 Dydd a haedd attan.

“ No other Bard will sing—the violence
 “ Of convulsive throes,
 “ When forth proceeded—with thundering din,
 “ The billows against the shore,
 “ In Dylan’s day of vengeance—
 “ A day which extends to us.”

The last line of this passage, as I shall shew hereafter, alludes to certain mystic rites, which the Druids celebrated in commemoration of the deluge.

Casnodyn, an eminent Bard of the fourteenth century, in speaking of the future judgment, alludes to this passage of Taliesin, and copies several of his words: at the same time, he introduces certain images, which may remind us of the Druidical opinion, that fire and water would, at some period, prevail over the world.*

“ He whom we know, will suddenly prepare the field of “ judgment: to us will he come, and will not keep silence.
 “ When God shall reveal his countenance, the house of “ earth will uplift itself over us: a panic of the noise of “ legions in the conflict, will urge on the flight: harshly,
 “ the loud-voiced wind will call: the variegated wave will “ dash around the shore: the glancing flame will take to “ itself the vengeance of justice, recruited by the heat of “ contending fires, ever bursting forth.”†

* Strabo, L. IV.

† W. Archaiol. p. 431.

In the same poem, the Bard thus expresses himself, in an address to the Supreme Being—

Trevnaist sŷr a mŷr morawl Dylan.

“Thou didst set in order the stars, and the seas, of the sea-faring Dylan.”

Hence it is clear, that the ancient and modern Bards regarded Dylan, the son of the sea, as no other personage than the patriarch, whose history is connected with that of the deluge.

It is now time to look for the elegy, which Taliesin composed for this venerable character. This little piece is not to be found in the Archaiology; but, from a copy in my possession, I am led to conclude that the title is erroneous, and that, instead of being called Marwnad Dylan, the Elegy of Dylan, it ought to have been, Cerdd am Ddylan, a Song respecting Dylan. The argument is simply this.

A certain plain having been inundated in the age of our Bard, he expostulates with the Deity upon the occasion of this event. He then makes a natural transition to the mythology of the flood of Dylan, or the deluge, which had been occasioned by the profligacy of mankind, and concludes with a prayer for the deliverance of his countrymen from the existing calamity.

Some of the lines are imperfect in my copy; but with the correction of a few syllables, as suggested equally by the sense, by the measure, and by the alliteration which that measure requires, it stands as follows—

Un Duw uchav,
 Dewin doethav,
 Mwyav o vael.
 Py delis maes,
 Pwy ai swynas
 Yn llaw trahael?
 Neu gynt nog ev
 Pwy oedd tangnev,
 Ar reddv gavael?
 Gwrthriv gwastradth
 Gwenwyn a wnaeth
 Gwaith gwythloesedd.
 Gwenyg Dylan
 Adwythig lan,
 Gwaith yn hydredd.
 Ton Iwerddon,
 Ton Vanawon
 A thon Ogledd.
 A thon Prydain
 Torvoedd virain
 Yn beddirwedd—
 Golychav i Dâd,
 Duw, Dovydd Dâd,
 Gwlad heb omedd :
 Creawdr Celi
 A'n cynnwys ni
 Yn drugaredd !

Which may be thus translated—

“ O sole, supreme God, most wise unfolder of secrets, “ most beneficent ! What has befallen the plain, who has “ enchanted it in the hands of the most generous ! In for“mer times, what has been more peaceful than this district,

“as a natural possession !

“It was the counter-reckoning of profligacy, which produced the bane in the laborious pang of wrath—the bil-lows of Dylan furiously attacked the shore: forth, impetuously, rushed the wave of Ireland, the wave of the Manks, the Northern wave, and the wave of Britain, nurse of the fair tribes, in four orders.

“I will pray to the Father, God, the Ruler, the Father who reigns without control, that he, the Creator, the Mysterious One, would embrace us with his mercy !”

This little ode, I think, cannot supply the slightest shade of authority, for ranking Dylan ail Ton amongst the British chieftains of the sixth century. The name merely occurs in the recital of a few circumstances of the national and local tradition of our ancestors, respecting the deluge; and thus it connects the character of Dylan with that of Dwyvan, and Nevydd Nâv Neivion, recorded in the Triads.

Dylan, the Declan of Irish tradition, sounds like a contraction of Deucalion; and the people who preserved this name, affirm, that they derived their origin from the neighbourhood of Thessaly, where the story of Deucalion was told. But not to insist upon these circumstances, I may be allowed to remark, that the sea, the waves, or even the streams of Dylan, are used in the Welsh language, to denote the main ocean, or a boundless expanse of water; and that the metaphor evidently refers to the deluge.

Having now produced some evidence, that the Britons did retain certain memorials of the deluge, and of the pa-patriarch who survived that catastrophe, I will, in the next place, consider their representation of that patriarch's character, that we may discover how far their notions respecting him, and the incidents of his days, affected their national religion.

This venerable personage has already been introduced by a variety of names, as Dwyvan, Nevydd Náv Neivion, and Dylan; but we have had no positive evidence that he received divine honours.

Were I permitted to lay stress upon obvious etymologies, I might say, that some of those names are remarkable, and import that proposition. Thus Dwy, cause, origin, the existent. Dwy-van, the high or lofty cause—the father of mankind. His wife's name was Dwy-vach, the lesser cause—the mother of mankind. These names seem analogous to the Pangenetor and Magna Mater of antiquity, which were objects of worship,

So again: Nevydd, as a derivative of Név, Heaven, implies the celestial. Náv, a Lord, the Creator: like many other terms of ancient British mythology, it is still used as a name of the Supreme Being. Neivion, in the Bards, is a name of God. "Also the name of a person in the British mythology, probably the same with Neptune."* So that Nevydd Nav Neivion is the Celestial Lord Neivion.

Under these consecrated characters, we may infer, that the patriarch Noah received divine honours; and consequently, that he constituted one of the principal divinities acknowledged by the Druids.

* Owen's Dict. in voce.

This fact admits of absolute proof, when we contemplate the character of the same patriarch, as delineated under the name of HU (pron. Hee), who secured the world from a repetition of the deluge, and whom the Cymry acknowledged as their remote progenitor, as the great founder of their sacred and civil institutes, and as their God.

In order to elucidate this subject, I shall, first of all, revise some of the evidence which I adduced upon a former occasion.

In a Triad already cited, after the account of the sacred ship which preserved the human and brute species, when the lake burst forth and drowned the world, is subjoined, The drawing of the avanc to land out of the lake, by the oxen of HU GADARN, so that the lake burst no more. Here his history is expressly referred to the age of the deluge. But what character did he support in that age? The mythological Triads represent him only as a human patriarch, and a lawgiver. The following particulars are recorded of him.

1. He lived in the time of the flood; and
2. With his oxen, he performed some achievement, which prevented the repetition of that calamity. Triad 97.*
3. He first collected together, or carried the primitive race; and
4. Formed them into communities or families. Triad 57.

* These numbers refer to that series which begins p. 57. W. Archaiol. V. II.

5. He first gave traditional laws, for the regulation and government of society. Triad 92.

6. He was eminently distinguished for his regard to justice, equity, and peace. Triad 5.

7. He conducted the several families of the first race to their respective settlements in the various regions. Triad 4.

8. But he had instructed this race in the art of husbandry previous to their removal and separation. Triad 56.

Such are the particulars which I find recorded in those Triads, respecting Hu the Mighty. If characteristics like these determined my opinion, that the picture exclusively represented the patriarch Noah, I hope they have not led me to transgress the laws of criticism, which have been allowed in similar cases.

The great Mr. Bryant is satisfied with such marks as these: and he points out a delineation of the progenitor of all nations, in nearly the same words.

“ The patriarch, under whatever title he may come, is “ generally represented as the father of Gods and men; but “ in the character of Phoroneus, (for in this he is plainly “ alluded to) he seems to be described merely, as the first
 “ of mortals. The outlines of his history are so strongly “ marked, that we cannot mistake to whom the mythology “ relates. *He lived in the time of the flood: He first built
 “ an altar: He first collected men together, and formed them “ into communities: He first gave laws, and distributed* “ *justice: He divided mankind by their families and nations,

“ over the face of the earth.”

If the learned be authorized by sound criticism, to refer the traditions of the Greeks to the incidents of primitive history, there can be no just reason for denying the like privilege to the Britons, in behalf of their national mythology, when they find it has recorded the very same circumstances. The character of Hu is, then, as justly referable to the patriarch Noah, as that of Phoroneus.

Before I trace the character of this personage, as delineated by the ancient Bards, it may be proper to hear what was said and thought of him in the middle ages. Iolo Goch, a learned Bard, who wrote in the fourteenth century, thus draws the portrait of Hu, as a patriarch.

Hu gadarn, pŵr, hoew geidwawd
 Brenin a roe'r gwŷn a'r gwawd
 Emherawdr tir a moroedd
 A bywyd oll o'r byd oedd.
 Ai dalioedd gwedy diliw
 Aradr gwaisg arnoddgadr gwiw :
 Er dangos ein ior dawngoeth
 I'r dyn balch, a'r divalch doeth
 Vod yn orau, nid gau gair,
 Ungreft, gan y tâd iawngrair.

“ Hu the Mighty, the sovereign, the ready protector,
 “ a king, the giver of wine and renown, the emperor of the “ land and the seas, and the life of all that are in the world.
 “ was he.

* Analysis, V. II. p. 266.

“ After the deluge, he held the strong-beamed plough,
 “ active and excellent; this did our Lord of stimulating “ genius, that he might shew to the proud man, and to the “ humbly wise, the art which was most approved by the “ faithful father; nor is this sentiment false.”

It is scarcely possible, that the character of Noah should be drawn in stronger colours, or with touches more exclusively appropriate. The picture can be ascribed to no other mortal.

Yet this patriarch was actually deified and worshipped, by the ancient Britons.—Sion Cent, an illustrious poet, of the fifteenth century, complains of the relics of the old superstition, and thus characterizes the religion of the votaries of Hu, as distinguished from that of Christ.

Dwy ryw awen dioer ewybr
 Y sy'n y byd, loewbryd lwybr:
 Awen gan Grist, ddirist ddadl
 O iawn dro, awen drwyadl:
 Awen arall, nid call cant
 Ar gelwydd, vudr argoeliant!
 Yr hon a gavas gwyr Hu,
 Carnrwyg prydyddion Cymru.

“ Two active impulses truly, there are in the world;
 “ and their course is manifest; an impulse from Christ—
 “ joyful is the theme—of a right tendency: an energetic “ principle.

“ Another impulse there is (indiscreetly sung) of falsehood
 “ and base omens: this has been obtained by the men of “ Hu, the usurping Bards of Wales.”

Here, the Welsh are charged with their devotion to Hu, as a Heathen God; nor was this complaint of the Christian Bard wholly out of season; for, however, strange it may appear in the present age, some of his contemporaries were not ashamed to avow themselves the votaries of this Pagan divinity. Of this, the following lines of Rhys Brydydd furnish a glaring proof.

Bychanav o'r bychenyd
 Yw Hu Gadarn, ve i barn byd;
 A Mwyav a Nav i ni,
Da Coeliwn, a'n Duw Celi.
 Ysgawn ei daith ag esgud:
 Mymryn tês gloewyn ei glud.
 A mawr ar dir a moroedd
 A mwyav a gav ar goedd,
 Mwy no'r bybodd! 'marbedwn
 Amharch gwael i'r mawr hael hwn!

“ The smallest of the small is Hu the Mighty, in the “ world's judgment; yet he is the greatest, and Lord over us,
 “ we sincerely believe, and our God of mystery. Light is his “ course, and swift: a particle of lucid sunshine is his car.
 “ He is great on land and seas—the greatest whom I shall “ behold—greater than the worlds! Let us beware of offer“ ing mean indignity to HIM, the Great and the Boun- “ tiful!”

Here we find that Hu the Mighty, whose history as a patriarch, is precisely that of Noah, was promoted to the rank of the principal Demon God amongst the Britons; and, as his chariot was composed of the rays of the sun, it may be presumed that he was worshipped, in conjunction with that luminary: and to the same superstition, we may refer what is said of his light and swift course.

Nor was Hu alone, elevated to the heavens, but even the sacred oxen, his constant attribute, were contemplated, as bellowing in the thunder, and glaring in the lightning, upon which subject we have the following lines, by Llywelyn Moel.

Ychain yn' o chynhenid
 Hu Gadarn, a darn o'i did
 A'i bum angel, a welwch,
 A pheirian aur flamdan flwch.

“Should it be disputed, I assert—These are the oxen of Hu the Mighty, with a part of his chain, and his five angels (or attendants) which ye now behold, with a golden harness of active flame.”

The chain and the harness allude to the mythological achievement of Hu and his oxen—the drawing of the Avane out of the lake, so as to prevent the repetition of the deluge.

Thus we find, that Hu Gadarn, to whom the Triads, evidently ascribe the exclusive history of Noah, is recognized in the same view precisely, by the Bards of the fourteenth century.

He is acknowledged as a ready protector or preserver; thus, the peculiar righteousness of Noah made him the preserver of the human race.

He is the giver of wine and renown: so Noah was the first who planted a vineyard, taught mankind the method of preparing wine, and pronounced a prophetic eulogy upon his dutiful sons.

Hu was the Emperor of the land and seas: so Noah was the chief personage in the ark, the only vessel which preserved life amidst the universal sea; and after that sea had subsided, he became the emperor of the whole earth.

Hu was the life of all that are in the world; thus, Noah was the common parent of all nations, and of every individual.

And lest we should retain any doubt as to the age in which he lived, we are told, that immediately after the deluge, he first taught mankind the practice of agriculture: this is, exclusively, the history of the patriarch Noah.

Yet we are assured, with equal clearness, that from the traditional character of this same patriarch, sprung a religion of falsehood and base omens or a heathen religion, which was directly contrary to Christianity. Nay, the same deified patriarch was regarded, as the greatest God, and viewed as riding on the sun-beams, or personified in the great luminary, and operating in the clouds and meteors of heaven.

That such a superstition should have been fabricated by the Bards in the middle ages of Christianity, is a supposition utterly irreconcilable with probability. We must, therefore, regard it as a relic of the old heathen superstition of the country, which some individual Britons, with their proverbial predilection for antiquated notions and customs, no less impiously than absurdly retained.

But if this be genuine British heathenism, it will be expected, that the vestiges of it should be discovered in the oldest Bards, which are now extant. And here, in fact, they present themselves in horrid profusion. The first instances I shall produce, are taken from Aneurin's Gododin, of which the reader will find a translation in the fourth section of this Essay.

The Bard is lamenting a dreadful massacre, which happened in the fifth century, near a celebrated heathen temple, which he describes in these words :

“ It is an imperative duty to sing the complete associates, the cheerful ones of the ark of the world. Hu was not without his selection in the circle of the world; it was his choice to have Eidiol the Harmonicus.” *

Here we find, that the selection of a priest to preside in this temple, was peculiarly the act and privilege of Hu, who, therefore, must have been the chief God, to whom the sacred building was dedicated. And, as we have already seen that Hu was emphatically styled Emperor of the Land and Seas, the world was, properly speaking, his temple. Hence the fabric erected to his honour, is denominated the Ark of the world, alluding to the vessel in which he had presided over the world of waters; and the circle of the world, in reference both to the form of the building, and to the circle in which his luminous emblem, the sun, expatiated in the heavens.

With Hu, I find a goddess associated, in the Gododin, by the name of Kéd—the Ceto of antiquity, whom Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber pronounce to be no other than Ceres or Isis.

I

* Song 24.

But let us look for these divinities under other names.

The Bard, when speaking of the same great temple, has the following remarkable passage.

“ A structure was not formed, so eminently perfect, so great, so magnificent, for the strife of swords. In the place where Morien preserved the merited fire, it cannot be denied, that corpses were seen by the wearer of scaly mail, who was harnessed and armed with a piercing weapon, but covered with the skin of a beast. His sword resounded on the head of the chief singer of Nöe and Eseye, at the great stone fence of their common sanctuary.—Never more did the child of Teithan move.” *

As the Bard has informed us, that this structure was sacred to the god Hu, and the goddess Kéd; and as he now tells us, that it was the common sanctuary of Nöe and Eseye, it must follow, that Nöe and Eseye were the same characters as Hu and Kéd.

Here, then, we have an express authority for the assertion, that Hu was, originally no other than the great patriarch. Not that I suppose the heathen Britons had actually preserved the name of Noah; but that our Bard, who lived in the latter part of the fifth, and beginning of the sixth century, had some knowledge of the sacred records, where he found the name and actions of Noah; and did not want sufficient sagacity to discover the absolute identity of Noah and Hu, in history and character. Thus we find the ground-work of this superstition expressly ascertained.

* Song 15.

It may, therefore, be proper to examine a little further, the titles and attributes which this Bard assigns to the deified patriarch.

In the passage before us, we find Morien preserving the merited fire. Whether this is a title of the god or his priest, or of both, I leave others to determine. The name seems to be equivalent to Janus Marinus. In another place, the Bard ascribes the building of the temple to him. "This hall would not have been made so impregnable, had not Morien been equal to Caradoc."—He was also its protector.—

"Morien defended the blessed sanctuary, the basis and the chief place of distribution of the source of energy, of the most powerful and the most ancient."*

In the passage first cited, Hu is styled Teithan; for his chief singer is the child of Teithan: and this name seems to be no other than the Titin of the Hiberno-Celtæ, the Tydain of Taliesin and the Triads, and the Titan of antiquity—a known title of the sun.

With allusion to this divinity, Aneurin says—"And now the lofty leader, Huan, (the sun) is about to ascend: the sovereign most glorious—the lord of the British isle." †

* Song 16.

† Ibid. 6.

It scarcely needs to be remarked, that Huan is a derivative of Hu, to whom the sovereignty of the British Isle is expressly attributed by Taliesin.

We have seen that the ox or bull is the appropriate attribute of Hu, and accordingly, Aneurin styles his chosen priest, the radiant bull of battle. This is, properly, a title of the god himself, and conferred, as usual, upon his minister. But the host who fought under the conduct of this priest, are denominated Biw Beli bloeddvawr, the herd of the roaring Beli.* Hence it appears, that Hu and Beli constituted but one character. Yet the latter is certainly the Celtic god Belinus, mentioned by Ausonius, and expressly identified with Apollo, the solar divinity.

In allusion to the sun's progress in the ecliptic, Aneurin styles this god, the lion of the greatest course. He has also the name of Búdd, Victory, and Buddugre, the "god of victory, the king who rises in light, and ascends the sky."†

Hu, or his mythological son, is called Angor, the producer of good, the serpent who pierces the sullen ones. Angor implies undeviating: and this Angor has the name of Merin, Marinè, and is the son of Mad-ien, Bonus Janus, who is also called Seithenin, a little of Saturn, as I shall shew hereafter. Saturn and Janus are the same, and the character is referred by mythologists, to the patriarch Noah.

Again it is said of the chosen priest of Hu, "The placid Eidiol felt the heat of the splendid Grannawx."‡ This title, as well as Granwyn, in the poems of Taliesin, is referable to Apollo or the Sun, whose attributes are, therefore, ascribed to the British Hu.

* Song 15.

† Ibid. 22.

‡ Ibid. 25.

Upon the whole, it appears from this Bard, that Hu the Mighty, the Diluvian god of the heathen Britons, was no other than the patriarch Noah, deified by his apostate descendants, and regarded by a wild superstition, as some way connected with the sun, or symbolized by the great luminary of the material heavens. Hence the bull, the lion, the serpent, and other general emblems of the Heliodamoniac worship, became his representatives upon earth.

But Taliesin is universally acknowledged by the Welsh, as the most profound teacher of their ancient superstition. This Bard avows himself of the order of the Druids, and expressly characterizes the mystical effusions of his muse, by the name of Dawn y Derwyddon, Lore of the Druids. It may, therefore, be of importance to our subject, to consider his representation of the character of Hu.

In the first place, then, I shall remark a few particulars, in an elegy which he composed on the death of a priest of Hu, whom he calls Aeddon, which I think, was a title of the god himself. This priest had presided in Mona, as appears from the opening of the poem.*

“ Disturbed is the island of the praise of Hu, the island
 “ of the severe remunerator; even MONA of the gene“ rous bowls, which animate vigour—the island whose “ barrier is the Menai.”

Mona was a well-known seat of the Druids. Many have regarded it as the great centre of their superstition. Yet this sacred spot, we find, was eminently dedicated to the honour of Hu, as the principal object of adoration. To this severe remunerator the island belonged; and here his votaries quaffed the generous bowl, in his sacred festivals: they must, therefore, have regarded him as the god who presided over drinking.

* Appendix, No. 10.

Taliesin, one of the chief of his votaries, in the beginning of the sixth century, cannot be supposed to have devised, either the character or the honours of this god. What he has delivered to us, must have been what he learned from his predecessors in superstition; and Hu must have been the great god of Mona, in the earlier ages of Druidism.

It appears by the sequel of this poem, that the priest of Hu had the charge of a sacred Ark, and that Aeddon, that is, the god himself, had come from the land of Gwydion, (Hermes) into the strong island of Sëon, at the time of the deluge, and had brought his friends safe through that dreadful calamity. Here we have a curious mythological account of the flood, which shews, that the original history of Hu was purely Diluvian.

Hu, the lord of Mona, is again styled the severe inspector. He has the title of Búddwas, the dispenser of good, the dragon chief, the proprietor, and the rightful claimant of Britain.

The Bard then proceeds to recite the long toil of the just ones, upon the sea which had no shore, and their ultimate deliverance, as the reward of their integrity; where it is clearly intimated, that Hu, or Aeddon, was the leader of this righteous band,

In another poem,* Taliesin introduces this Diluvian god by the name of Deon, the distributor, who had bestowed upon him, as his chief priest and vicegerent, the sovereignty of Britain. In the age of our Bard, this could have been nothing more than conferring an empty title: but we may hence infer, that the chief Druid, during the high day of his authority, had claimed and exercised the power implied by this title; and that the god who invested him with this high privilege, was the chief object of his homage.

In this poem, the honours of Hu are connected with those of a goddess, named Kêd, or Ceridwen, of whom I shall say more hereafter.

We next find the or, the attribute of Hu, stationed before a lake, at the time of a solemn procession: an eagle, another of his symbols, is carried aloft in the air, in the path of Granwyn, the pervading sovereign (the sun). This divinity is styled Hêwr Eirian, the splendid mover. The descriptions throughout this poem, are full of allusions to the deluge; and the draining of the generous bowl is eminently conspicuous amongst the rites of the sacred festival. †

Another poem mentions Pen Annwn, the ruler of the deep, who is evidently the same as Hu, the emperor of the seas. This piece is full of the mythology of the deluge; and the Bard or Druid who violated his oath, after having drank out of the cauldron of this ruler of the deep, was doomed to destruction. ‡

* Appendix, No. 1.

† Ibid. No. 2.

‡ Ibid. No. 3.

The poem called Cadair Teyrn On,* brings the solar divinity, or Celtic Apollo, upon the stage: and we find, by the extract which I have subjoined, † that he was actually worshipped under the character of FIRE. Yet this ardent god boasts, that he could protect his chair of presidency in the midst of a general deluge. He is, therefore, the same character as the Diluvian Hu, or the patriarch symbolized by the sun.

The divinity who presides in the sacred ox-stall, and is personified in the bull, Becr Lled, is styled the supreme proprietor, and has his sanctuary in an island surrounded by the tide. ‡ Supreme proprietor is the title of Hu, and the ox or bull is his symbol.

In the former part of the poem, called the Elegy of Uthr Pendragon, § that is, wonderful supreme leader, or wonderful chief dragon, this god is introduced in pageantry, and describes himself as the god of war, the atherial, having the rainbow for his girdle. He is a protector in darkness, a ploughman, a defender of his sanctuary, and a vanquisher of giants. It is he who imparts to heroes a portion of his own prowess. He is an enchanter, and the president of Haeardor, the vessel with the iron door, which toiled to the top of the hill. He was yoked as an ox, he was patient in affliction—he became the father of all the tribes of the earth. He was a Bard and a musician.

Such are the impertinencies with which superstition con-

* Appendix, No. 4.

† Ibid. No. 5.

‡ Ibid. No. 6.

§ Ibid. No. 11.

contaminated the history and character of the venerable patriarch.

In the second part of this poem, a sacrificing priest invokes this god with a prayer for the prosperity of Britain. He styles him Hu, with the expanded wings—Father, and King of Bards—Father Dëon, presiding in the mundane circle of stones.

He is again named Prydain—the glancing Hu—the sovereign of heaven—the gliding king—the dragon, and the victorious Beli, Lord of the Honey Island, or Britain.

In the song called Gwawd Llúdd y Mawr, the praise of the great leader, the Bard professes to have derived his mystic lore from the traditions of the distinguished Ogdoad, by which he means the Arkites, or eight persons who had been preserved in the sacred ship. This piece contains the mythology of the deluge, together with some pretended vaticinations relating to subsequent times.

The chief of the Diluvians, and therefore Hu the Mighty, is styled Cadwaladr, the supreme disposer of battle, and described as a Druid. He is attended by a spotted cow, which procured blessings. On a serene day she bellowed, I suppose as a warning presage of the deluge; and afterwards, she was boiled, or sacrificed, on May eve, the season in which British mythology commemorated the egress from the ark. The spot where she was sacrificed, afforded rest to the deified patriarch, who is here styled Yssadawr, the consumer or sacrificer.

The same personage has the name of Gwarthmor, ruler of the sea, Menwyd the blessed, and the dragon ruler of the world. He was the constructor of Kÿd, the ark, which passed the grievous waters, stored with corn, and was borne aloft by serpents.

Hence the symbolical ape, the stall of the cow, and the mundane rampart, or circular temple, are consecrated to the Diluvian god, and his vessel; and the season of their festive dance, is proclaimed by the cuckoo.

The Arkite god is called the father of Kêd, the ark, which is represented as an animal, I suppose Κητος, the whale, investing the Bard with the sovereignty of Britain. We have already seen this prerogative exercised by Hu, the Diluvian god: Kêd must therefore have acted in conjunction with the mystical father.

The same god is the sovereign of boundless dominion, in whose presence our priest trembles before the covering stone, in order to escape the quagmire of hell.

Another poem* styles this Diluvian god the reaper, in allusion to the patriarch's character as a husbandman. His priest has the name of Aedd, a title of the god himself. He had died and lived alternately; and it was his privilege to carry the ivy branch, with which, Dionysius says, the Britons covered themselves in celebrating the rites of Bacchus.

To the particulars here recited, the mythological reader, if he takes the pains to peruse the passages to which I refer, will be able to add many circumstances equally pertinent. But what I have here produced may suffice to shew, that our ancestors paid an idolatrous homage to a great patriarch, who had been preserved from a general deluge; that they regarded this deified mortal as symbolized by the sun, or in some manner identified with him; and that this compound divinity was regarded as their chief god.

* Appendix, No. 13.

But as Cæsar has informed us, that the opinion of the Druids corresponded in the main with that of other nations, respecting the nature and attributes of the Gods, it will be asked, with which of the gods of antiquity is this helio-patriarchal divinity to be identified?

To those who have studied mythology only in a common school pantheon, in the works of Homer, or in the Latin poets, my answer to such a question may not prove perfectly satisfactory.

The mythology of the Britons was of a character somewhat more antique than that of the Greeks and Romans, as we find it in their best writers. The poets and sculptors of these nations refined upon Gentile superstition, and represented each of their gods with his own appropriate figure, and with a character elegantly distinct: whereas the old religion of the nations contemplated the objects of adoration as referable to one history, and represented them as grouped in one compound body, marking the various relations, operations, and attributes of their divinity, by a multitude of heads, arms, and ornaments, with which they graced their principal idol. Thus the Helio-Arkite god of the Britons comprehended, in his own person, most of the gods which pertained to their superstition.

Upon this subject, I shall produce the opinion of Mr. Bryant.

“ The first writers,” says this great mythologist, “ were the poets; and the mischief (of polytheism) began with them: for they first infected tradition, and mixed it with allegory and fable. The greatest abuses (says Anaxagoras, Legat.) of true knowledge came from them. I insist, that we owe to Orpheus, Homer, and Hesiod, the fictitious names and genealogies of the pagan dæmons, whom they are pleased to call gods: and I can produce Herodotus to witness what I assert. He informs us (L. II. c. 53.) that Homer and Hesiod were about 400 years before himself, and not more. These,” says he, “ were the persons who first framed the theogony of the Greeks, and gave appellations to their deities, and distinguished them, according to their several ranks and departments. They, at the same time, described them under different appearances: for, till their time, there was not in Greece any representation of the gods, either in sculpture or painting; nor any specimen of the statuary’s art exhibited: no such substitutes were in those times thought of.”*

Again—“ The blindness of the Greeks, in regard to their own theology, and to that of the countries from whence they borrowed, led them to multiply the terms which they had received, and to make a god out of every title. But however they may have separated and distinguished them under different personages, they are all plainly resolvable into one deity, the sun. The same is to be observed, as to the gods of the Romans.”—

* Analysis, V. I. p. 160.

“ There was by no means, originally, that diversity of gods which is imagined, as Sir John Marsham has very justly observed. Neque enim tanta πολυθεοτης Gentium, quanta fuit Deorum πολυωνυμια.”—“ Pluto, amongst the best theologians, was esteemed the same as Jupiter; and indeed the same as every other deity.”—“ Porphyry (ap. Euseb.) acknowledged, that Vesta, Rhea, Ceres, Themis, Priapus, Proserpine, Bacchus, Attis Adonis, Silenus, and the Satyrs, were all one and the same. Nobody had examined the theology of the ancients more deeply than Porphyry: he was a determined pagan: and his evidence in this point is unexceptionable.”*

To these passages I shall subjoin the following, from Mr. Faber. “ Osiris, Bacchus, Cronus, Pluto, Adonis, and Hercules, taken in one point of view, as will be shewn at large hereafter, are all equally the sun; but if we examine their respective histories, and attentively consider the actions which are ascribed to them, we shall be convinced, that in their human capacity, they can each be no other than the great patriarch.”†

“ If the several histories of the principal deities, revered by most of the ancient nations, be considered, we shall find them at once allusive to the Sabian idolatry, and to the catastrophe of the deluge. Thus the account which is given of Osiris and Isis, if taken in one point of view, directs our attention to the sun and moon; but if in another, it places immediately before our eyes the great patriarch, and the vessel in which he was preserved. Accordingly, we learn from Plutarch, that Osiris was a

* Analysis, V. I. p. 307, 309, 310, 316.

† Mysteries of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 17.

“ husbandman, a legislator, and a zealous advocate for the “ worship of the gods; that Typhon, or the sea, con“ spired against him, and compelled him to enter into an “ ark,” &c.*

Such being the result of the most elaborate inquiries which have been made into the theology of the Gentiles, I may be allowed to assert, that the Helio-Arkite god of the Britons was a Pantheos, who, under his several titles and attributes, comprehended the group of superior gods, which the Greeks and other refined nations separated and arranged as distinct personages.

As inventor of the few arts with which the Druids were acquainted, and as the conductor of the primitive race to their respective settlements, he was their Mercury.

As the solar divinity, and god of light, he was their Beli, or Apollo.

As King of Heaven, he was their Jupiter.

As supreme disposer of battle, he was their Mars: and as ruler of the waters, he was their Neptune. And thus Cæsar might discover, in the superstition of the Druids, all the gods of his own pantheon, with their distinct attributes.

But as giver of wine and generous liquor, and as president of festive carousals, which is his favourite picture amongst the Bards, he was certainly that Bacchus, whose rites, according to Dyonisius, were duly celebrated in the British islands. Under this character, he appropriates the title of

* Mysteries of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 151.

Hu, which is precisely the 'r-as, or 'r-ns of antiquity, without the termination. His two great symbols, the bull and the dragon, so often introduced, come under the same point of view.

“ I have observed,” says Mr. Faber, “ that Bacchus, or Dionusus, was one of the many titles of the Helio-Arkite Noah: accordingly, in his person, the two emblems at present under consideration (the bull and the dragon) will be found to be eminently united. The Athenians, as we learn from Arrian, worshipped him as the son of Jupiter and Proserpine.—Jupiter, however, accomplished the rape of Proserpine, under the figure of a dragon; and Bacchus is universally described as bearing some resemblance to a bull. Hence we shall see the reason why, in the Bacchic mysteries, the bull was celebrated as the parent of the dragon, and the dragon as the parent of the bull.”

“ The whole history, indeed, of Bacchus, is full of allusions to the symbols of the bull and the serpent.— Thus Euripides introduces a chorus of Bacchantes, inviting him to appear in the shape of a bull, a dragon, or a lion.—And thus the author of the Orphic hymns styles him, the deity with two horns, having the head of a bull, even Mars-Dionusus, revered in a double form, and adored, in conjunction with a beautiful star.—For the same reason, Plutarch inquires, why the women of Elis were accustomed to invoke Bacchus, in the words of the following hymn :

“ Come, hero Dionusus, to thy holy temple on the sea shore; come, heifer-footed deity, to thy sacrifice, and “ bring the graces in thy train! Hear us, O bull, worthy

 “ of our veneration : hear us, O illustrious bull!”

“ After attempting to solve this question, in a variety of “ different ways, he concludes with asking, whether the “ title of bull might not be given to Bacchus, on account
 “ of his being the inventor and patron of agriculture.” *

It appears, then, that the bull and the dragon were symbols, eminently conspicuous in the worship and rites of Bacchus; and it may hence be presumed, that the very frequent introduction of them in the British Bards, alludes to the worship of their Helio-Arkite god, considered in that character.

To the British rites of this divinity, I think the tradition, respecting the oxen of Hu, drawing the Avanc out of the lake, has a marked reference. It will therefore be proper, in order to catch a glimpse of those rites, to consider the British mythology of oxen, lakes, and islands, embosomed in lakes.

Of all the objects of ancient superstition, there is none which has taken such hold of the populace of Wales, as the celebrated oxen of Hu. Their fame is still vigorous in every corner of the principality, as far, at least, as the Welsh language has maintained its ground. Few indeed pretend to tell us precisely, what the Ychen Banawg were, or what the Avanc was, which they drew out of the lake.

Mr. Owen explains Banawg—prominent, conspicuous, notable. And tradition tells us, that the oxen, which appropriated this epithet, were of an extraordinary size, and that they were subjected to the sacred yoke. I have also several reasons to suppose, that in Pagan Brîtain, some rites in commemoration of the deluge, and in which the agency of sacred oxen was employed, were periodically celebrated, on the borders of several lakes.

* Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 190, &c. with the author's authorities.

In replying to a tale, which seems utterly impossible, we use an old adage, which says, The Ychen Banawg cannot draw the Avanc out of deep waters. This imports, that they could draw him out of waters of a certain depth. And popular and local traditions of such an atchievement, are current all over Wales. There is hardly a lake in the principality which is not asserted in the neighbourhood, to be that where this feat was performed. Such general traditions of the populace must have arisen from some ceremony, which was familiar to their ancestors. And this ceremony seems to have been performed with several heathenish rites. Mr. Owen tells us there is a strange piece of music, still known to a few persons, called Cainc yr Ychain Banawg, which was intended as an imitation of the lowing of the oxen, and the rattling of the chains, in drawing the Avanc out of the lake.*

The beasts which the Druids employed in this rite, were probably bulls of the finest breed which the country afforded, but distinguished, either by the size of their horns, or by some peculiar mark, and set apart for sacred use.

By Avanc, we generally understand the beaver, though in the present instance, tradition makes it an animal of prodigious bulk and force. In this druidical fable, the Avanc seems to be, ultimately referable to the patriarch himself, or to the ark, considered as his shrine, and supposed to have been extricated from the waters of the deluge, by the aid of the sacred oxen.

K

* Welsh Eng. Dict. V. Banawg.

I once thought the story contained only a mythological allusion to the sacrifice of oxen offered by Noah, when he obtained a promise, that the waters should no more return to cover the earth. And this idea seems to be countenanced, by a passage of Taliesin, already cited, and importing, that the diluvian patriarch found rest upon the spot, where the spotted cow was boiled or sacrificed. But it appears, by the various notices respecting these oxen, and by general analogy, that our superstitious ancestors had some further allusions. Let us hear what is said of the animals, by mythologists.

Mr. Bryant was decidedly of opinion, that the bulls and oxen of mythology had constant reference to Noah, to the ark, or to the history of the deluge.

“ It is said of the patriarch, after the deluge, that he “ became an husbandman. This circumstance was reli“ giously recorded in all the ancient histories of Egypt.
 “ An ox so useful in husbandry, was, I imagine upon this “ account, made an emblem of the patriarch. Hence, upon “ many pieces of ancient sculpture, are seen the ox’s head,
 “ with the Egyptian modius between his horns; and not “ only so, but the living animal was in many places, held “ sacred, and revered as a deity.”*

* Analys. V. II. p. 417.

The author then proceeds to shew, that the sacred bulls, Apis and Mnevis, referred to the history of the same patriarch.

Again—"Bulls were sacred to Osiris (who was Noah) the great husbandman. They were looked upon as living oracles, and real deities, and to be in a manner, animated by the soul of the personage, whom they represented."*

"Symbolical imagery, observes Mr. Faber, was very much in use among the ancients, and will be found to provide (q. pervade?) the whole of their heterogeneous mythology. A heifer seems to have been adopted, as perhaps, the most usual emblem of the ark, and a serpent as that of the sun; while the great patriarch himself was sometimes worshipped under the form of a bull, and sometimes, in consequence of his union with the sun, hieroglyphically described as a serpent, having the head of a bull." †

And this superstition comes into contact with the Celtic nations, and is brought near to our British ancestors.

"With regard to the devotion of the Hyperboreans, to the arkite mysteries, we are plainly informed by Dionysius, that the rites of Bacchus, or Noah, were duly celebrated in Britain. Hence arose their veneration for the bull, the constant symbol of the deity of the ark.

"By this god, made of brass, says Dr. Borlase, the Cimbri, Tentones, and Ambrones, swore to observe the

* Analys. V. II. p. 422.

† Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 177.

“ articles of capitulation, granted to the Romans, who “ defended the Adige against them. After their defeat, “ Catulus ordered this bull to be carried to his own house,
 “ there to remain, as the most glorious monument of his “ victory. This god is ranked with Jupiter, Esus, and “ Vulcan, being called Tarvos Trigaranus, from the three “ cranes perching, one on his head, one on the middle of “ his back, and the third on his hinder parts.”*

I cannot help thinking, that the people who named this bull, spoke a language very similar to our Cambro-British: for Tarw Trigaranus is Welsh for a bull with three cranes. And the idol itself seems to be connected with British superstition, as I shall shew hereafter, that the chief priest, who attended the arkite mysteries, was styled Garanhúr, the lofty crane. Hence the three cranes may have represented three officiating priests.

We have already seen, that certain oxen or bulls, were assigned to Hu, the Diluvian god of the Britons, as his ministers or attendants.

I shall now examine whether there are any traces of evidence in the documents left us by our ancestors, that the god himself was venerated under the form of this animal.

And first of all, I shall consider a few notices, which are scattered in the mythological Triads.

We are here informed of three primary oxen of Britain: the first of which was, Melyn Gwanwyn, the yellow ox of the spring; the next was Gwineu, Ych Gwlwlydd, the brown

* Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 210.—Antiq. of Cornwall, B. II. C. 16.

ox, which stopped the channel, and the third Ych Brych, brás ei benrhwy, the brindled ox with the thick headband.*

The yellow ox of the spring, I make no doubt is the sign Taurus, into which the sun entered at the season when the Druids celebrated their great arkite mysteries. Mr. Faber has shewn, that the bull of the sphere, in general mythology, was the god of the ark.† And the mythology of Britain did not differ essentially from that of other nations.

The ox which stopped the channel, seems to have some reference to the oxen of Hu, which prevented the repetition of the deluge. Of the third notice, I shall have occasion to speak hereafter.‡

That the oxen and bulls of mythology implied the same thing, will be granted: and I find that the Triads mention three bulls of battle.§ The first of them is styled Cynvawr Cad Gaddug, mab Cynvyd Cynvydion: that is, the primordial great one, of the contest of mystery, son of the prior world, of former inhabitants. This elaborate title, evidently points to that personage, who was son of the antediluvians, an inhabitant of the former world, and the great patriarch of the new. He was the bull, Mars-Dionusus of the Orphic poet. And, as the great one of the mystery, he was no other than the Mighty Hu of the Britons.—The introduction of Cad Gaddug into his title, brings forward his other great symbol. Prydydd Bychan, an eminent Bard of the thirteenth century, says—Dragon gyrchiad Cad Gaddug. The dragon repairs to the battle of mystery.

* See W. Archaeology, V. II. p. 21 and 80.

† Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 206.

‡ See Appendix, No. 3.

§. W. Archaeol. V. II. p. 4. 72. 76.

If I am not mistaken, this bull of battle is recognized upon some of the ancient altars remaining in Britain. The Bards sometimes introduce Mohyn or Möyn, for Tarw, a bull.* Therefore Möyn Cad is synonymous with Tarw Cad, bull of battle: and Camden has copied two inscriptions, Deo Mogonti Cad, and Deo Mouno Cad.† It should appear from hence, that our bull of battle was publicly acknowledged as a god, in the ages when the Romans occupied Briton: and consequently, that the Helio-arkite god of the Britons was venerated, under the title and form of a bull.

The two other bulls of battle, mentioned in this Triad, are said to have been British princes, in the sixth century; but I must observe, that the priest of the god, or the prince who eminently patronizes his worship, is often dignified with one or other of his titles. Thus Aneurin styles the solar deity, Beli Bloeddawr, the loud roaring Beli, that is, the bull Beli, and then calls his priest, Taw Trîn, bull of battle.

Again, the Triads speak of the three bull sovereigns of Britain,‡ one of whom is named Elmur mab Cadeir. The firm or established spirit, son of the Chair; in another copy, the son of Cibddar, the Mystic. This seems to be a description of Hu, the god of mystery. The second, a mere duplicate of the same personage under a different title, is Cynhaval mab Argat, prototype, son of the ark. This can be no other than the patriarch, who issued from the ark, and presented the first specimen of man to the new world.

* So Taliesin, Appendix, No. 2.

† Gibson's Camden Col. 1075.

‡ W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 4. 13. 76.

The third bull sovereign was Avaon or Adaon, son of Taliesin; but it appears, that Avaon is one of the cardinal points in the sun's course; and Taliesin, radiant front is a title of solar deity, though conferred on his chief priest.

The mythological bulls of Britain, whether warriors or sovereigns, still pertain to the Helio-arkite superstition. Let us consider their character, as Dæmons.

The three bull dæmons of Britain were Ellyll Gwidawl, the dæmon of the whirling stream; Ellyll Llyr Merini, the dæmon of the flowing sea; and Ellyll Gurthmwl Wledig, the dæmon of the sovereign, of the equiponderate mass (q. the earth?)* All this seems referable to him, who was acknowledged as emperor of the land and seas, and worshipped as chief dæmon god of pagan Britain. And we are told, that of the three dæmons which were recognized in this island, the first was Ellyll Banawg: but this was the epethet of the oxen of Hu. To him, therefore, the symbolical ox or bull chiefly pertains. The other dæmons, in this Triad, are not said to have been in the form of this animal. One of them is called Ellyll Ednyvedawg Drythyll, the dæmon of wanton animation, and seems to allude to a symbol which disgraced, even paganism itself: the last was Ellyll Malen, the dæmon Malen, the Minerva or Bollona of Britain. †

In these notices we find the Helio-arkite god identified with an ox or bull, whether as the leader in battle, as supreme ruler of the land, or as the great object of dæmon worship. It may, therefore, be presumed that the Druids adored him in the image of a bull; or that they kept the living animal as his representative. But let us hear what the ancient Bards have said upon this subject.

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 16.

† Ibid. V. II. p. 16, 17, 71.

That Aneurin calls the Helio-arkite god the roaring beli, and gives his priest the title of bull of battle, has been observed. So Taliesin, who, in the poem called Buarth Beirdd, the Oxpen of the Bards, or Bardic stall of the ox, professes to deliver the lore of his order, with superior accuracy, pronounces a kind of curse upon the pretended Bard, who was not acquainted with this sacred stall. This inclosure was situated in a small island, or rock, beyond the billows. The rock displayed the countenance of him who receives the exile into his sanctuary, that is, of the deified patriarch, who admitted his friends, banished from the old world, into his ark.

It was also the rock of the supreme proprietor, that is, of Hu the Mighty, who is repeatedly called the supreme proprietor of the British islands, and the emperor of the land and seas: and he was evidently the Bacchus of the Britons: for not to insist at present upon other proofs, we find his priests throughout this poem, hastening to the jolly carousal, and making a free indulgence in the mead feast, a principal rite in the worship of their god.

If then, the sanctuary of Hu, the Helio-arkite patriarch, and Bacchus of the Druids, was an ox-stall, it must be inferred, that the god presided in his temple, either in the image of a bull, or under the representation of the living animal.

Accordingly, we find the priest, who gives the mead feast, and introduces the votaries into the temple, making proclamation in the name of the sacred edifice, and of the god himself—"I am the cell—I am the opening chasm—I am "the Bull, Becr-Lled." This title has no meaning in the British language. It seems to consist of two Hebrew terms, implying the bull of flame.* And the idea, presented by such a derivation, perfectly harmonizes with the general tenor of British mythology.

For, as those oxen, which were merely the attendants and ministers of Hu, roared in thunder, and blazed in lightning, we must suppose that the supreme bull himself, had an essence still brighter, and displayed his form in the solar fire.

Hu was therefore worshipped in the form of a bull. But this bull, upon a great occasion, had submitted to the sacred yoke, and dragged the chain of affliction.

The patriarch god, who, amongst his other titles, is addressed by the name of Hu, thus speaks, by the mouth of his priest—"I was subjected to the yoke, for my affliction; "but commesurate was my confidence; the world had no "existence, were it not for my progeny." †

Here it seems to be implied, that our mythologists regarded an ox, submitting to the yoke, as an apt symbol of the patriarch, in his afflicted state during the deluge. And this explains the meaning of the Bard, when he says of the Diluvian patriarch. "The heavy blue chain didst thou, "O just man endure; and for the spoils of the deep (the "ravages of the deluge) doleful is thy song." ‡

* בקר להט

† Appendix, No. 11.

‡ Ibid. No. 3.

In the same poem, the Bard says of certain persons, who were not admitted into the society of the patriarch, and into the mysteries of his own order—" They knew not on " what day the stroke would be given, nor what hour of " the splendid day Cwy (the agitated person) would be " born, or who prevented his going into the dales of Devwy " (the possession of the waters). They know not the brin- " dled ox with the thick head-band, having seven score knobs " in his collar."

This brindled ox is the same tauriform god, whom the Triads mention as one of the primary oxen of Britain. A few lines lower down, we have a hint, that the Druids kept an ox as the representative of their god. The Bard says—" They know not what animal it is, which the silver-headed " ones (the hoary Druids) protect." This animal must have been the brindled ox mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Indeed, the keeping of sacred oxen seems to have been essential to the establishment of these fanatical priests. Thus, Taliesin and Merddin are introduced, bewailing the destruction of their temples and idols in the sixth century.

" It was Maelgwn whom I saw, with piercing weapons :
" before the master of the fair ox-herd (têr y vulu), his " household will not be silent. Before the two personages,
" they land in the celestial circle—before the passing form
" and the fixed form, over the pale white boundary. The " grey stones they actually remove. Soon is Elgan (the " supremely fair) and his retinue discovered—for his slaugh-
" ter, alas, how great the vengeance that ensued!"* This

* See Appendix, No. 9.

Elgan, master of the fair herd, seems to have been the symbol of Hu, and he was a living animal, as appears from the fate which befel him.

Upon the whole, it appears that the Helio-arkite god was represented by a bull. I do not think, however, that he is to be identified with the Ychain Banawg, or oxen which he employed in drawing the avanc out of the lake. These animals were subjected to his control. It appears by a passage which I shall presently exhibit, that they were originally three in number; but that one of them failed in the office assigned to him and his companions, which was, to draw the shrine or car of their master in a sacred procession. To account for the selection of these animals for this use, it may be observed, that as mythology represented the god himself as a bull, it might be deemed meet, that he should have ministers of the same species. But the original and historical Hu, was no other than the patriarch Noah. So his original Ychain Banawg may have had human existence. And it may be conjectured that, in reality, they were the three sons of the patriarch, who attended upon him, with the title of אֵלִפִּים, which implies both leaders, princes, and oxen. And tradition, whilst unsophisticated, may have reported, that they assisted their aged father in his debarkation.*

The oxen of Hu were concerned in the event of the deluge; therefore, connected with the Arkite mythology of the Britons. Yet popular tradition recites the following tale of them. One of these oxen overstrained himself, in drawing forth the avanc, so that his eyes started from their sockets, and he dropped down dead, as soon as the feat was achieved. The other, pining for the loss of his companion, refused food, and wandered about disconsolate, till he died in Cardiganshire, at a place which is called Brevi, that is, the bellowing, from the dismal moans of the sacred animal. Some such incident may have happened during the commemorative rites of the Britains; and the locality of the tale implies a probability, that this spot was sacred to the rites of Hu, and his oxen.

* And hence may have arisen the fable of the אֵלִפִּים drawing the shrine out of the water.

In this instance, as well as in many others, the early Christians selected the sanctuary of their heathen predecessors, for the place of a religious establishment. Perhaps this was done with the view of diverting the attention of the people from the objects of idolatrous superstition, which they had been used to contemplate in those places; but it had generally a contrary effect. Dewi, first Bishop of St. David's, founded a church and a religious seminary at Brevi. But so far was this from obliterating the memory of the old superstition, that the history of the Christian bishop seems to have been confounded with that of a heathen god; and the Bards transferred to him the mythological oxen of the votaries of Hu. Thus Gwynwardd Brecheiniog, a Bard who wrote in the former part of the twelfth century.

Deu ychen Dewi deu odidawc
 Dodyssant hwy eu gwarr dan garr kynawc.
 Deu ychen Dewi arterchawc—oetynt.
 Deu garn a gertynt yn gyd preinyawc;
 I hebrwng anrec yn redegawc
 Y Lasgwm, nyd oet trwm tri urtassawc.
 Edewid Bangu gu gadwynawc;
 A'r deu ereill ureisc y Vrycheinyawc.

Ban del gofyn arnam ny rybytwn ofnawc
 Rac gormes kedeirn cad dybrunawc.
 Ar Duw a Dewi deu niuerawc
 Yd galwn bressen bresswyl uodawc.

“ The two oxen of Dewi, two of distinguished honour, “ put their necks under the car of the lofty one. The two “ oxen of Dewi, majestic were they. With equal pace
 “ they moved to the festival. When they hastened, in con“ ducting the sacred boon to Glascwm (the green valley), the “ THREE dignified ones were not sluggish. The amiable “ Bangu was left behind, bearing his chain; and the two “ others, with their huge bulk, arrived in Brechinia. We “ shall not be terrified for the intrusion of the mighty ones, “ meritorious in battle. Let us call upon God and Dewi,
 “ the two leaders of hosts, who, at this hour, willingly so-
 “ jour amongst us.”

Throughout this curious poem, which is of considerable length, the Bard intermixes a large proportion of mythological imagery and description, with the popish legends of Dewi. We need not, then, be surprised, that he assigns to his patron saint those celebrated oxen, which were the ascertained property of Hu, to whom all that is said in the passage before us must be referred. Here, then, we may remark the following particulars of the Ychain Banawg. They were, originally, three in number, but, by the failure of one, reduced to a pair. Their office, in the commemorative ceremony of the Britons, was to draw the car of the lofty one, or of Hu, the patriarch god, to whom the oxen were consecrated in solemn procession. And if this was the meaning of the memorial, the avant of mythology, which the sacred oxen drew out of the lake, and which gave rise to the ceremony, must imply the identical shrine, or vehicle, which inclosed the Diluvian patriarch.

Such ceremonies were not peculiar to the Britons; and, perhaps, did not originate in these islands. Mr. Faber has proved, by just reasoning, that the Phœnician Agruerus, the patron of agriculture, was no other than the deified patriarch Noah. But, as the author observes—"Sancho-
 " niatho informs us, that his statue was greatly revered by
 " the Phœnicians, that his shrine was drawn from place to " place by a yoke of oxen, and that, amongst the Byblians,
 " he was esteemed even the greatest of gods!"*

Here we have the avanc, and the Ychain Banawg of Hu Gadarn; but the Phœnician historian does not tell us, that this shrine was drawn out of a lake, which was an essential circumstance in the mythology of the Britons. It may therefore be proper to consider their opinion concerning certain lakes, and the phænomena which they presented.

The Druids represented the deluge under the figure of a lake, called Llyn Llion, the waters of which burst forth, and overwhelmed the face of the whole earth. Hence they regarded a lake as the just symbol of the deluge. But the deluge itself was viewed, not merely as an instrument of punishment to destroy the wicked inhabitants of the globe, but also as a divine lustration, which washed away the bane of corruption, and purified the earth for the reception of the just ones, or of the deified patriarch and his family. Consequently, it was deemed peculiarly sacred, and communicated its distinguishing character to those lakes and bays, by which it was locally represented.

* See Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 35, 43, 45, &c.

As a relict of this superstition of our ancestors, I may adduce the names of certain lakes amongst the Cambrian mountains; as, Llyn Creini, the lake of adoration, upon Cevn Creini, the hill of adoration: and Llyn Urddyn, the lake of consecration, in Meirionethshire; and Llyn Gwydd Ior, the lake of the grove of Iôr, or God, in Montgomeryshire.* Such names evidently imply, that some religious ideas were anciently connected with these lakes. And that this kind of superstition was prevalent amongst the ancient Druids, may be inferred from the testimony of Gildas, who informs us that they worshipped mountains and rivers.†

And, that the veneration for lakes was referable to the deluge, appears from the Welsh chronicles of Walter de Mapes, and Geoffrey of Monmouth. These writers, in the mass of their romance, involve a few genuine national traditions; which they would fain pass upon the world for sober history. Thus they introduce Arthur, as saying—"There is a lake near the Severn, called Llyn Llion, which swallows all the water that flows into it at the tide of flood, without any visible increase: but at the tide of ebb, it swells up like a mountain, and pours its waters over the banks, so that whoever stands near it at this time, must run the risk of being overwhelmed."‡

The Llyn Llion of these writers preserves the name of that mythological lake, which occasioned the deluge; of which it was, therefore, a local symbol. The peculiarity here assigned to it, may allude to some such natural phenomenon as the Hygre, or Severn Boár; a high and roar-

* See Camb. Reg. V. I. p. 302, 370.

† See Dr. Borlase's Antiq. of Cornwall, p. 110.

‡ W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 509.

ing surge, which leads the flood to the inland parts of the channel, whilst the river is actually ebbing in its æstuary. This circumstance the Druids may have remarked, and improved upon it, for the purposes of superstition.

The reference of the sacred lakes of the Britons to the deluge, is so clear in the mystical poems, that I need not cite particular passages. The reader is referred to the Appendix in general.

And not only the Britons, but the continental Celtæ also, are remarked in history for their superstitious veneration of lakes.

Strabo says, that the Gauls consecrated their gold in certain lakes; and adds, that lakes furnished them with their most inviolate sanctuaries. Μαλιστα δ' αυτοις αι λιμναι την ασυλιαν παρειχον. Here we must understand, certain islets, or rafts, inclosed within these lakes; as will be seen in the sequel.

We also learn from Justin, that in a time of public calamity, the priests of the Gauls, that is, the Druids, declared to the people, that they should not be free from the pestilential distemper which then raged among them, till they should have dipped the gold and silver, gotten by war and sacrilege, in the lake of Thoulouse.*

Hence the author of Rel. des Gaules supposes, that the Gauls of Thoulouse had no other temple than a sacred lake.

* Lib. XXXII. c. 3.

The same author presents us with this curious account—

“ Many persons resorted to a lake, at the foot of the Gevaudan mountain, consecrated to the moon, under the name of Helanus, and thither cast in, some, the human habits, linen, cloth, and entire fleeces; others cast in cheese, wax, bread, and other things, every one according to his ability; then sacrificed animals, and feasted for three days.”*

This seems to be perfectly consonant with British superstition, in regard to the Diluvian lakes.

But the deluge overwhelmed the world, and this catastrophe was figured out in the traditional history of several of our sacred lakes.

The annotator upon Camden mentions the names of six lakes, in which ancient cities are reported to have been drowned.†

I could add several others to this list, but I observe, that tradition generally adds, that some person or small family escaped upon a piece of timber, or by other means.— Though I think it improbable that such submersions actually happened, I refer the tales in which they are reported, to those lessons which our ancestors learned from their heathen instructors, whilst inculcating the mythology of the deluge.

The principal lake mentioned by our author is Llyn Sa-

L

* V. I. p. 114—128.

† Gibson's Camden Col. 706.

vaddan, in Brecknockshire. The old story of its formation is not totally forgotten. I recollect some of its incidents, as related by an old man in the town of Hay.

“ The scite of the present lake was formerly occupied by “ a large city ; but the inhabitants were reported to be very “ wicked. The king of the country sent his servant to examine “ amine into the truth of this rumour, adding a threat, that “ in case it should prove to be well founded, he would destroy
 “ the place, as an example to his other subjects. The “ minister arrived at the town in the evening. All the inhabitants “ were engaged in riotous festivity, and wallowing in excess.
 “ Not one of them regarded the stranger, or offered him the rites
 “ of hospitality. At last, he saw the open door of a mean habitation, “ into which he entered. The family had deserted it to repair to “ the scene of tumult, all but one infant, who lay weeping in
 “ the cradle. The royal favourite sat down by the side of this “ cradle, soothed the little innocent, and was grieved at the “ thought, that he must perish in the destruction of his abandoned “ neighbours. In this situation the stranger passed the night ;
 “ and whilst he was diverting the child, he accidentally “ dropped his glove into the cradle. The next morning he “ departed before it was light, to carry his melancholy tidings
 “ to the king.

“ He had but just left the town when he heard a noise “ behind him, like a tremendous crack of thunder mixed
 “ with dismal shrieks and lamentations. He stopped to listen.
 “ Now it sounded like the dashing of waves : and presently
 “ all was dead silence. He could not see what had happened,
 “ as it was still dark, and he felt no inclination to return
 “ into the city : so he pursued his journey till sunrise. The “ morning was cold. He searched for his gloves, and finding
 “ but one of them, he presently

“recollected where he had left the other. These gloves
 “had been a present from his sovereign. He determined “to return for that which he had left behind. When he “was come near to the scite of the town, he observed with “surprize, that none of the buildings presented themselves
 “to his view, as on the preceding day. He proceeded a “few steps—The whole plain was covered with a lake.
 “Whilst he was gazing at this novel and terrific scene, he “remarked a little spot in the middle of the water: the wind “gently wafted it towards the bank where he stood; as it “drew near, he recognized the identical cradle in which he “had left his glove. His joy on receiving this pledge of “royal favour was only heightened by the discovery, that
 “the little object of his compassion had reached the shore “alive and unhurt. He carried the infant to the king, and “told his majesty, that this was all which he had been “able to save out of that wretched place.”

This little narrative evidently contains the substance of one of those tales, which we call Mabinogion, that is, tales for the instruction of youth, in the principles of Bardic mythology. And it seems to have for its object, a local and impressive commemoration of the destruction of a profligate race, by the waters of the deluge.

Such traditions of the submersion of cities, in the lakes of the country, or of populous districts, by the intrusion of the sea, are current all over Wales. They were not unfrequent in other heathenish countries; and I observe, Mr. Faber uniformly refers them to the history of the deluge.

Thus “Phlegyas and his children, the Phlegyæ, were said
 “to have come from the land of Minyas, and in the pride
 “of their heart, to have quitted the city of the Orchome-“nians or Arkites. This desertion from the Minyæ or “Noachidæ, proved the cause of their destruction; for it

 “was in reality, the separation of the antediluvian giants, “or Titans, from the family of Noah. They refused to “imitate the piety of that patriarch, and were consequently “excluded from the ark by their own wickedness. Accord“ingly Nonnus represents them as being overwhelmed by “Neptune, with the waters of the ocean.

“From its deep rooted base, the Phlegyan isle
 “Stern Neptune shook, and plung’d beneath the waves,
 “Its impious inhabitants.”*

“I am persuaded, says our author, that the tradition of “the sinking of the Phlegyan isle, is the very same as that “of the sinking of the island Atlantis. They both appear “to me to allude to one great event, the sinking of the old “world beneath the waters of the deluge; or if we suppose
 “the arch of the earth to have remained in its original po“sition, the rising of the central waters above it.—The “force of truth leads him (M. Baily) unguardedly to main“tain, for he doubtless did not perceive the consequences “of such a position, that the Atlantians were the same as “the Titans and the giants; and he even cites an ancient “tradition, preserved by Cosmas Indico-Pleustes, that Noah “formerly inhabited the island Atlantis; but that, at the “time of the deluge, he was carried in an ark to that con“tinent, which has ever since been occupied by his poste“rity. These particulars unequivocally point out to us,
 “the proper mode of explaining the history of the At“lantians.”†

* See Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 327, with the author’s authorities.

† Ibid V. II. p. 223.

As a further elucidation of our prevalent traditions, of the submersion of cities and regions, I must take the liberty to transcribe the following curious passage.

“ As the sinking of the Phlegyan isle, and the submersion of the island Atlantis, equally relate to the events of the flood; so the Chinese have preserved a precisely similar tradition, respecting the preservation of the pious Peiruun, and the fate of the island Maurigasima, the Atlantis of the eastern world.

“ Maurigasima, says Kœmpfer, was an island famous in former ages, for the excellency and fruitfulness of its soil, which afforded among the rest, a particular clay, exceedingly proper for the making of those vessels, which now go by the name of Porcelain, or China ware. The inhabitants very much enriched themselves by the manufacture; but their increasing wealth gave birth to luxury and contempt of religion, which incensed the gods to that degree, that by an irrevocable decree, they determined to sink the whole island. However, the then reigning king and sovereign of the island, whose name was Peiruun, being a very virtuous and religious prince, no ways guilty of the crimes of his subjects, this decree of the gods was revealed to him in a dream; wherein he was commanded, as he valued the security of his person, to retire on board his ships, and to flee from the island, as soon as he should observe, that the faces of the two idols which stood at the entry of the temple turned red. So pressing a danger, impending over the heads of his subjects, and the signs whereby they might know its approach, in order to save their lives by a speedy flight, he caused forthwith to be made public; but he was only ridiculed for his zeal and care, and grew contemptible to his subjects. Some time

“ after, a loose idle fellow, further to expose the king’s su“ perstitious fears, went one night, nobody observing him,
 “ and painted the faces of both idols red. The next morn“ ing notice was given to the king, that the idols’ faces “ were red; upon which, little imagining it to be done by “ such wicked hands, but looking upon it as a miraculous “ event, and undoubted sign of the island’s destruction
 “ being now at hand; he went forthwith on board his ships
 “ with his family, and all that would follow him; and with “ crowded sails, hastened from the fatal shores, towards the “ coasts of the province Foktsju, in China. After the “ king’s departure, the island sunk; and the scoffer, with “ his accomplices, not apprehensive that their frolic would “ be attended with so dangerous a consequence, were swal“ lowed up by the waves, with all the unfaithful that re“ mained in the island, and an immense quantity of por“ celain ware,

“ The king and his people got safe to China, where the “ memory of his arrival is still celebrated by a yearly fes“ tival, on which the Chinese, particularly the inhabitants “ of the southern maritime provinces, divert themselves on “ the water, rowing up and down in their boats, as if they “ were preparing for a flight, and sometimes crying with a “ loud voice, Peiruan, which was the name of that prince,
 “ The same festival hath been, by the Chinese, intro“ duced into Japan; and is now celebrated there, chiefly
 “ upon the western coasts of this empire.”

“ It is easy to see, continues Mr. Faber, that this tradi“ tion, respecting the island Maurigasima, is a mere adap“ tation of the fable of the Atlantis, to the manners and “ habits of the Chinese. The same local appropriation “ which fixed the one island in the western, fixed the other

“ in the eastern ocean; and, while the Greeks and Phœnicians worshipped the great solar patriarch, under the name of Atlas; the Chinese revered the common progenitor of mankind, under the title of Peiruun, or P’Arun, ‘the Arkite.’* ”

To the same general conclusion, to which Mr. Faber is led by a view of universal mythology, I had arrived by the contemplation of British tradition. This coincidence furnishes a presumption, that we are both right, and that these local tales of people so widely separated in time and situation, must allude to some great event, in which the ancestors of all nations were concerned. This event could be no other than the deluge.

And as the tales of the submersion of towns and provinces, presented our rude ancestors with local commemorations of the destruction of mankind, by the deluge; so, on the other hand, we find the country full of tradition, which must be referred to the preservation of the patriarch and his family, through the midst of that awful calamity. To this class pertain the rivers which are represented as passing uncorrupted and unmixed through the waters of certain lakes. Let it suffice to mention two instances.

Camden, speaking of Llyn Savaddan, already described, says—

“ Lherweni, a small river, having entered this lake, still retains its own colour, and as it were, disdaining a mix-

* Myst. of the Cabiri, V. II. p. 229, from Kœmpfer’s Japan, Appendix, p. 13.

“ture, is thought to carry out no more, nor other water,
“ than what it brought in.”*

Again, “ In the East part of the county (Meirioneth)
“ the river Dee springs from two fountains.—This river,
“ after a very short course, is said to pass entire and un-
“ mixed, through a large lake, called Llyn Tegid, in Eng“ lish, Pemble Mear—carrying out the same quantity of “ water that it brought in.”†

As the lakes themselves were symbols of the deluge, so these incorruptible rivers were the stream of life, which passed, whole and uninjured, through those destructive waters.

Here it is to be remarked, that the fountains of the Dee are distinguished by the names of Dwyvawr, and Dwyvach: and these are the very names of the mythological pair already mentioned, who were preserved in the sacred ship, when the lake burst forth and drowned the world. Hence it must be inferred, that these united and immaculate streams, were regarded as symbols of those distinguished personages. Such are the sacred rivers reported by Gildas, to have been worshipped by the Pagan Britons.

The honours of the Dee may be inferred, not only from the consecrated spots and temples which adorn its banks, but from its very names. It was called Dyrdwy, the divine water; Dyrdonwy, the water conferring virtue or grace;

* Gibsons's Camden, Col. 706.

† Ibid. Col. 791.

and Peryddon, a divine stream, or, the stream of the great causes or commanders.*

The Dee was then worshipped as the image of the deified patriarch, and his supposed consort. Nor were even these conceits peculiar to our Celtic ancestors. Mr. Faber has shewn by a variety of arguments and deductions, that Styx, the river or lake of hell, like our British lakes, was a personification of the flood. † “Accordingly, adds our author, the Sholiast upon Hesiod declares, that Styx was the water which proceeded from the lowest parts of the earth, and occasioned the phenomenon of the rainbow.” This passage brings to view the great deep, and the sacred sign given to Noah upon the subsiding of the deluge. Yet Homer records a tale of the Titaresius, a stream which flows forth from the Styx, precisely analogous to the British mythology of the Dee.

“Or where the pleasing Titaresius glides,
 “And into Peneus, rolls his easy tides;
 “Yet o’er the silver surface, pure they flow,
 “The sacred stream, UNMIXED with streams below,
 “Sacred and awful! from the dark abodes
 “Styx pours them forth, the dreadful oath of gods.” ‡

This ænigma being precisely the same in Greece and Britain, it is probable, that if it were duly investigated, it would be found to admit of the same solution.

* See Owen’s Dict. V. Donwy, Dywrduy, Perydd, and Peryddon.

† Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 259, &c.

‡ Iliad, B. II. Pope’s translation.

But I must go on to consider another circumstance of tradition, connected with the lakes and bays of Britain; and by which our ancestors commemorated the vessel in which their deified patriarch overcame the deluge.

This vessel is denominated a caer, that is, a fenced inclosure, and the same caer is described as an island.* Hence the sanctuaries of the Druids, which were intended as representatives of this prototype, are often styled caers and islands, and were frequently constructed within small islands, which were considered as having once floated upon the surface of the water. And where these were wanting, our hierophants seem to have constructed a kind of rafts or floats, in imitation of such islands.

Thus the British Apollo, speaking through his priest, asks the names of the three caers, between the high and the low water mark, and boasts, that in case of a general deluge, he would preserve his seat of presidency safe and inviolate: intimating, that the sacred spot would mount on the surface of the waters.† Such is the representation which we have of the great sanctuary of Sidi.—

“The inundation will surround us, the chief priests of Kéd: yet complete is my chair, in Caer Sidi, neither disorder nor age will oppress him that is within it.—Three loud strains, round the fire, will be sung before it, whilst the currents of the sea are round its borders, and the copious fountain is open from above.”‡

* Appendix, No. 3.

† Ibid. No. 4.

‡ Ibid. No. 1.

Taliesin describes his holy sanctuary as wandering about from place to place. He first mentions it, as being upon the surface of the ocean: the billows assail it, and with speed it removes before them. It now appears on the wide lake, as a city not protected with walls; the sea surrounds it. Again we perceive it on the ninth wave, and presently it is arrived within the gulph, or bend of the shore; there it lifts itself on high, and at last, fixes on the margin of the flood. After all, it appears that this holy sanctuary was nothing more than the little island of Dinbych, in Dyved, or that insulated spot, upon which the town of Tenby, in Pembroke-shire, stands at present.*

What can all this mean, unless it be, that this was a sacred island of the Druids, and that it was congenial to their arkite mythology, to devise the fable, that it had once floated on the surface of the ocean?

In the mountains near Brecknock, there is a small lake, to which tradition assigns some of the properties of the fabulous Avernus. I recollect a Mabinogi, or mythological tale, respecting this piece of water, which seems to imply, that it had once a floating raft, for here is no island.

“ In ancient times, it is said, a door in a rock near this lake, was found open upon a certain day every year. I think it was May day. Those who had the curiosity and resolution to enter, were conducted by a secret passage, which terminated in a small island, in the centre of the lake. Here the visitors were surprized with the prospect of a most enchanting garden, stored with the choicest

* Appendix, No. 2.

“ fruits and flowers, and inhabited by the Tylwyth Tég, or “ fair family, a kind of fairies, whose beauty could be “ equalled only by the courtesy and affability which they “ exhibited to those who pleased them. They gathered fruit
 “ and flowers for each of their guests, entertained them “ with the most exquisite music, disclosed to them many “ events of futurity, and invited them to stay, as long as “ they should find their situation agreeable. But the “ island was sacred, and nothing of its produce must be “ carried away.”

“ The whole of this scene was invisible to those who “ stood without the margin of the lake. Only an indis“ tinct mass was seen in the middle; and it was observed,
 “ that no bird would fly over the water, and that a soft “ strain of music, at times, breathed with rapturous sweet“ ness in the breeze of the mountain.

“ It happened upon one of these annual visits, that a “ sacrilegious wretch, when he was about to leave the gar“ den, put a flower, with which he had been presented,
 “ into his pocket; but the theft boded him no good. As “ soon as he had touched unhallowed ground, the flour va“ nished, and he lost his senses.

“ Of this injury, the fair family took no notice at the “ time. - They dismissed their guests with their accustomed “ courtesy, and the door was closed as usual. But their “ resentment ran high. For though, as the tale goes, the “ Tylwyth Tég and their garden undoubtedly occupy the “ spot to this day—though the birds still keep at a re“ spectful distance from the lake, and some broken strains
 “ of music are still heard at times, yet the door which led “ to the island has never re-appeared; and, from the date

“ of this sacrilegious act, the Cymry have been unfortunate.”

It is added, that “ Some time after this, an adventurous person attempted to draw off the water, in order to discover its contents, when a terrific form arose from the midst of the lake, commanding him to desist, or otherwise he would drown the country.”

I have endeavoured to render this tale tolerable, by compressing its language, without altering or adding to its circumstances. Its connection with British mythology may be inferred, from a passage of Taliesin, where he says, that the deluge was presaged by the Druid, who earnestly attended, in the æthereal temple of Geirionydd, to the songs that were chaunted by the Gwyllion, children of the evening, in the bosoms of lakes.*

The floating island of this lake was evidently an Arkite sanctuary.

Giraldus Cambrensis, speaking of the lakes amongst the mountains of Snowdon, mentions one which was remarkable for a wandering island, concerning which some traditional stories were related. Camden thinks this lake is to be recognized in “ A small pond, called Llyn y Dywarchen (i. e. Lacus Cespitis), from a little green moveable patch, which is all the occasion of the fable of the wandering island.” †

This great antiquary was but little inquisitive, as to the nature and tendency of popular tradition; otherwise he would have recorded some curious particulars of the islands in the celebrated lake of Lomond. He only observes, that “ It hath several islands in it, concerning which there are “ many traditional stories amongst the ordinary sort of “ people. As for the floating island here, I shall not call “ the truth of it in question; for what should hinder a “ body from swimming, that is dry and hollow, like a pin- “ nace, and very light? And so Pliny tells us, that certain “ green islands, covered with reeds and rushes, float up and “ down in the lake of Vadimon.”*

* Appendix, No. 12.

† Gibson's Camden Col. 797.

Pliny’s description of the lake of Vadimon is minute and curious. Many incredible stories were told of it; but the following particulars, amongst others, he observed as an eye witness.

The lake is perfectly round, the banks even, regular, and of equal height; so that it appears as if scooped out, and formed by the hand of an artist. The water is of a bluish or greenish colour, it smells of sulphur, and has the quality of consolidating things that had been broken. There is no vessel upon this lake, because it is sacred; but it has several fertile, wandering islands, of equal height and lightness, and formed like the keels or hulks of ships.

The same lake sends forth a stream, which, after flowing a short space, is buried in a cave, and runs deep under the earth. If any thing is cast into this stream, before it enters the cave, it is carried forth to the place where it reappears.†

* Gibson’s Camden Col. 1217.

† Plin. L. VIII. Epist. 20.

As this lake of Vadimon, or Vandimon, with its floating islands, was sacred, there can be little doubt, that it was accommodated by art to the commemoration of Arkite superstition; and consecrated to the Etruscan Janus, whose name it bore. But this divinity, as we are informed by a very curious relic of Etruscan antiquity, was no other than the Noah of Scripture.

Magnus pater Vandimon, qui a Latinis Janus, a Syris Noa vocatur, advenit in hanc regionem (scil. Hetruriam) cum secundo filio Japeto, et illius filiis; et cum venissent super hunc montem, sibi commodum, posteris jucundum putavit. Quare, in superiori parte, quæ salubrior esset, civitatem ædificavit, et Cethem appellavit. †

The arrival of Noah in Italy, is probably as fabulous as the settlement of Hu in Britain; but gods and deified persons are generally represented as having settled in those places, where their worship was established. All I would infer from the testimony of Pliny, connected with this passage, is, that the Helio-arkite patriarch was commemorated in his sacred lakes and floating islands in Italy, as well as in Britain; and consequently, that the tales of the Britons, respecting such lakes and islands, are authentically derived from heathen mythology.

And such floating islands, or rafts, substituted for islands, seem to have been generally viewed as symbols of the ark.

Mr. Faber remarks, that “ Herodotus mentions a deep “ and broad lake, near Buto, in which, according to the “ Egyptians, there was a floating island. On this island

* Inghir. Apud. Annot. ad Lactant. de Fal. Rel. L. I. cap. 13.

“ was a large temple, dedicated to Apollo, and furnished
 “ with three altars. It was not supposed, however, to have “ been always in a floating state, but to have lost its ori“ ginal firmness, in consequence of the following circum“ stance. When Typhon, or the ocean, was roaming “ through the world, in quest of Horus, or Apollo, the “ mythological son of Osiris, Latona, who was one of the “ primitive eight gods, and who dwelt in the city Buto, “ having received him in trust from Isis, concealed him
 “ from the rage of that destructive monster in this sacred “ island, which then first began to float.”*—“ As for “ the floating island mentioned by Herodotus,” continues
 Mr. Faber, “ it was probably only a large raft, constructed “ in imitation of the ark; while Horus, whose temple was “ built upon it, was the same person as his supposed father “ Osiris, or Noah, worshipped in conjunction with the “ sun.”

Again: “ This mode of representing the ark by a float“ ing island, was not exclusively confined to Egypt. As “ Latona and Apollo were two of the great gods wor“ shipped at Buto, so we find the same traditions prevalent
 “ at Delos, both with respect to its having once been a “ floating island, and to the various dangers by which “ Latona was assailed.”†

Delos, any more than our Dinbych, never wandered but in fable; and that, for the same reason, because it was consecrated to the Helio-arkite god; who, in his human capacity, had wandered upon the face of the deluge.

* Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 61. From Herodot. L. II. c. 156.

† Ib. p. 64. See also the lake and floating island of Cotylè in Italy,
 p. 65, &c.

The same author adduces many more instances in the course of his work, and then remarks in general.—“ All these lakes contained small sacred islands, which seem to have been considered as emblematical of the ark; whence those in the lakes of Buto and Cotyle, were supposed to have once floated.”* Thus he solves the problem of M. Bailly, who, noticing the extreme veneration of the ancients for islands, demands — † “ Ne trouvez-vous pas, Monsieur, quelque chose de singulier, dans cet amour des anciens pour les îsles? Tout ce qu’il y a de sacré, de grand, et d’antique s’y est passé: pourquoi les habitans du continent ont-ils donné cet avantage aux îsles, sur le continent même?” ‡

But the sacred islands of the Druids are not always to be regarded as merely symbolical of the ark. I find that certain islands, and rocky promontories, whether in the sacred lakes, æstuaries of rivers, or bays of the sea, represented the mount upon which the deified patriarch landed, from the waters of the deluge.

This fact is particularly evident, in the story of Gwyddnaw Garanhir, the lofty crane, priest of the ship, a hierophant, whose office it was to conduct the noviciates through a scenic representation of the patriarch’s adventures. To this end, he inclosed the persons to be initiated in coracles, covered with the skins of beasts, launched them from the

M

* V. II. p. 429. n.

† “ Does it not appear to you, Sir, that there is something singular in this partiality of the ancients to islands? In these, whatever is sacred, great, or ancient has constantly occurred, why have the inhabitants of the continent given islands this advantage over the continent itself?”

‡ Lettres sur l’Atlantide, p. 361.

shore in Cardigan bay, and, after they had weathered the mimic deluge, received them safe upon a reef of rocks, I suppose, Sarn Badrig, or Patrick's Causeway, which represented the landing-place of the patriarch.

In a curious poem, which I shall have occasion to insert in the next section, this scene is presented to view. The probationer standing upon the shore, and about to enter the mystic coracle, but observing that the waves were rough, and the rock at a considerable distance, exclaims—

“ Though I love the sea beach, I dread the open sea; a
“ billow may come, undulating over the stone.”

To this the hierophant replies—

“ To the brave, to the magnanimous, to the amiable, to “ the generous, who boldly embarks, the landing-stone of “ the Bards will prove the harbour of life: it has asserted
“ the praise of HEILYN, the mysterious impeller of the “ sky; and till the doom shall its symbol be continued.”

As this scene was to typify the passage through the deluge, it is evident, that the landing-stone which terminated that passage, and proved a harbour of life, stood for the rock or mount upon which the patriarch arrived safe, from the midst of the waters; the same upon which he built the altar, and obtained the gracious promise, that the deluge should return no more. The Druids then regarded certain islands, or rocks, contiguous to the water, as symbols of this mount,

In this sense, I regard the sacred rock which inclosed the *stall of the ox.—“Boldly swells the stream to its high limit—let the rock beyond the billow be set in order at the dawn, displaying the countenance of him who receives the exile into his sanctuary—the rock of the supreme priestor, the chief place of tranquillity.” In the name of this rock, the mystic priest proclaims—“I am the cell, I am the opening chasm—I am the place of re-animation!” This was then the landing-stone, the harbour of life, where the patriarch and his children were restored to light and animation, after having passed through the symbolical death of the deluge.

In allusion to this, the mystical Bard says—“Existing of yore, in the great seas, from the time when the shout was heard, we were put forth—whilst smiling at the side of the rock, Nér remained in calm tranquillity.” †

Nér was the Nereus of the Greeks and Romans, the great abyss, which was now retiring in calm serenity, when the patriarch and his family had reached the sacred rock.

To this mythology, the stories of the sacred islands in the lake of Lomond may have alluded. The Welsh romantic chronicles of the twelfth century inform us, that this lake receives sixty streams from the neighbouring hills, which it unites, and puts forth in the form of one river, named Leven—that it contains sixty islands, each of which has a rock or petra, with an eagle’s nest on its top—that these eagles assemble annually at a central petra, on May-

* Appendix, No. 6.

† Ibid. No. 7.

day, and by their concert of screams, vaticinate the fates of countries and kingdoms for the ensuing year.*

If, by these eagles, we understand fraternities of heathen priests, who often appear under that name, the story may have been authentically derived from the mythology of the country.

The island of Bardsea, so illustrious in Bardic and popish lore, seems to have been one of the rocks of the supreme proprietor, or places of re-animation, which commemorated the landing of the patriarch. Meilyr, a celebrated Bard of the twelfth century, says of it—

Ynys glan yglain
Gwrthrych dadwyrain
Ys cain iddi.

“ The holy island of the Glain (adder-stone), to which “ pertains a splendid representation of re-exaltation.

I might extend my remarks to several other islands, as that of Hu, Iona or Icolmkil, where popish superstition adopted the prejudice of its pagan ancestor; and even to the name of the great hierophant, Merddin Vardd, which implies priest of the sea-girt hill. But as this appellation has something of an obsolete sound, it is familiarized to our countrymen, by making him the son of Morvryn, mount in the sea. In all this, the reader may perceive the prediction of our ancestors for certain small insular spots, whether embosomed in lakes, bays, or æstuaries of rivers. The same feature of superstition has presented itself to the researches of modern antiquaries. Thus Dr. Borlase remarks some huge remains of monuments, which are deemed Druidical, in the islets of Scilly, more particularly in Trescaw, which was anciently called Inis Caw, the island of confederacy, whence a graduate in the Druidical school was styled Bardd Caw.

* W, Archaiol. V. II. p. 308.

It is not easy to determine with precision, which of our sacred islands symbolized the wandering ark, and which the stable mount, upon whose firm base the patriarch rested from his toils. But they had an intimate relation one to the other; and to some such sacred island, our mystical Bards refer the ultimate origin of their Diluvian lore.

In the poem called the spoils of the deep,* Taliesin treats of the deepest mysteries of his Arkite theology.

“ Am I not contending,” says the Bard, “ for the fame of that song which was four times reviewed in the quadrangular Caer, or sanctuary!—As the first sentence, was it uttered from the cauldron, which began to be warmed by the breath of the nine damsels. Is not this the cauldron of the ruler of the deep!” That is, the cauldron of Hu, the emperor of the seas. And again: “ Am not I contending for the honour of a song which deserves attention! In the quadrangular inclosure, in the island of the strong door or barrier, the twilight and the pitchy darkness are mixed together, whilst bright wine is the beverage of the narrow circle!”

The cauldron here mentioned, as will be seen in the ensuing section, implies the whole system of Druidical lore; and we are here told, that the mythology of the deluge was the first of its mystical productions. This cauldron was attended and originally prepared by nine damsels, in a quadrangular sanctuary, within a sacred island. These damsels are commemorated in the monuments of Cornwall.

* Appendix, No. 3.

“ On the downs, leading from Wadebridge to St. Columb, and about two miles distant from it, is a line of stones, bearing N. E. and S. W. This monument is generally called the nine maids.”* These maids, in whom the Diluvian lore originated, must be ultimately referred to the Gwyllion, certain prophetesses of mythology, who gave the first presage of the deluge, by their nightly songs, in the bosoms of lakes; that is, in their sacred islands.† From these fabulous models, a sisterhood of priestesses and pretended prophetesses seem to have been established early, and to have continued down to the sixth century.

Taliesin mentions four damsels, who attended to lament the death of the priest of Hu, or perhaps the mystical death of the god himself.‡

Gwyllion, the name of these damsels, is the plural of Gwyll, which, in its present acceptance, is a night wanderer, a fairy, a witch, &c. They are represented as children of the evening, probably because it was their office to celebrate certain nightly orgies.

* Dr. Borlase's Antiq. of Cornwall, p. 189, and Pl. XVII. Fig. 1.

† Appendix, No. 12.

‡ Ibid. No. 10.

 SECTION III.

The Character, Connexions, and mystical Rites of Kéd, or Ceridwen, the Arkite Goddess of the Druids. Her Identity with the Ceres of Antiquity.

THE detection of those divine honours, which the British sage awarded to the patriarch Noah, under whatever title; the magnificent mention of the ship of Nevydd; and the commemorations of the deluge upon the borders of the lakes of Cambria, encourage me to search for some farther vestiges of that kind of superstition, and of those mystic rites, which Mr. Bryant terms Arkite; which he considers at large in the second volume of his Analysis; and which he finds widely diffused over the Gentile world.

According to this very eminent writer, all the mysteries of the heathen nations seem to have been memorials of the deluge, and of the events which immediately succeeded. He remarks, that those mysteries consisted, for the most part, of a melancholy process, and were celebrated by night with torches, in commemoration of that state of darkness, in which the patriarch and his family had been involved.*

To be more particular; he remarks, that in these mystic rites, the ark of Noah was an object of superstitious veneration, over which a divinity was represented as presiding; and that this character was known by the several names of Selene, Isis, Ceres, Rhea, Vesta, Cybele, Archia, Niobe, and Melissa, which were the same: these being only titles, by which that female personage was described, who was supposed to be the genius of the ark, and the mother of mankind.*

* Analysis V. II. p. 331.

And as this personage was the genius of the ark, so our author takes notice, that the celebration of her mysteries in the British islands, stands upon ancient record. Having quoted the authority of Artemidorus upon this subject, Mr. Bryant thus declares his own opinion.—“ I make no doubt, “ but that this history was true, and that the Arkite rites “ prevailed in many parts of Britain.”†

Holding in my hand the clue presented to me in the preceding section of this Essay, and walking in the shade of this giant of erudition, who clears the way before me, I shall now proceed to the Druidical precinct, in search of the British Ceres: and I think I distinguish her character and history in the celebrated goddess Kéd, or Ceridwen, whom I have already remarked in close connection with the Arkite god.

Mr. Owen, in his Cambrian Biography, describes Ceridwen as “ A female personage, in the mythology of the “ Britons, considered as the first of womankind, having “ nearly the same attributes with Venus, in whom are per- “ sonified the generative powers.”

* Analysis, V. II. p. 268.

† Ibid. p. 473.

In this description, she is evidently acknowledged as the great mother: and Mr. Bryant says of Ceres, that she was named da mater, or the mother, because she was esteemed (as representative of the ark) the common parent, the mother of all mankind.*

In the introductory section of this Essay, I quoted several passages from those Bards who lived under the Welsh princes, in which Ceridwen is mentioned. They uniformly represent this character, as having pertained to the superstition of the primitive Bards, or Druids. They describe her, as having presided over the most hidden mysteries of that ancient superstition; and as a personage, from whom alone the secrets of their fanatical priesthood were to be obtained in purity and perfection. They also intimate, that it was requisite for those who aspired to the chair of presidency, to have tasted the waters of inspiration from her sacred cauldron, or, in other words, to have been initiated into her mysteries.

All this clearly points towards some solemn rites of our remote progenitors: and, for such rites, we can find no parallel amongst the heathen priesthood of other nations, if we except the celebrated mysteries of Ceres, Isis, or Cybele, all which names Mr. Bryant refers to the same history and character.

But it may be asked, if Ceridwen has the attributes of Venus, why should I labour to connect her more particularly with the character of Ceres?

I must observe, in reply, that this station seems to be pointed out for her by the most obvious mythological analogy. The most familiar idea which was entertained of Ceres, presented her as the goddess of corn; as having introduced the art of tillage, and taught mankind to sow the land, and cultivate the various species of grain.

* Analysis V. II. p. 338.

The reader may recollect a passage of Cuhelyn, a Bard of the sixth or eighth century, which I have already quoted, and which delineates the character of Ceridwen by one impressive epithet—she is styled Ogyrven Amhad, the goddess of various seeds. Thus Ceres and Ceridwen unite by a single touch. And our British Ceres, agreeably to Mr. Bryant's observation, was the genius of the ark. Her attribute was a boat, and she was even identified with that vessel, which was formed by the Diluvian patriarch; which carried its store of corn over the grievous waters, and, like the car of Ceres, mounted aloft with its harnessed serpents.*

The history and character of Ceridwen are exhibited in a very curious mythological tale, called Hanes Taliesin, the History of Taliesin. It is prefixed to the works of that Bard, and has been supposed to contain some romantic account of his birth; but, in reality, it has nothing to do with the history of a private individual, or with romance, in the common acceptation of that term. It is a mythological allegory, upon the subject of initiation into the mystical rites of Ceridwen. And though the reader of cultivated taste may be offended at its seeming extravagance, I cannot but esteem it one of the most precious morsels of British antiquity, which is now extant.

Before I exhibit the tale itself, it may be proper to ob-

* See the conclusion of Sect. II. and the poems there quoted.

viate an objection to the era of the incidents which it recites. Ceridwen is represented as living in the time of Arthur. Hence it may be argued, that she could neither have been the great mother, nor have belonged at all to the ancient superstition of the Druids.

But the Arthur here introduced, is a traditional character, totally distinct from the prince who assumed that name in the beginning of the sixth century.

He is placed, as Mr. Owen remarks, high in the mythological ages, and far beyond the reach of authentic, profane history. The great bear is his representative in the heavens, and the constellation, Lyra, is his harp. He is the son of Uthyr Bendragon, the wonderful supreme leader, and Eigyr, the generative power. His adventures, as related in the mythological tales, had evidently, according to my author, a common origin with those of Hercules, the Argonauts, &c.

Mr. Owen, with some hesitation, refers this character to the history of Nimrod.* I rather think that Arthur was one of the titles of the deified patriarch Noah. And with this idea, the account which we have of him in the Bards and the Triads, perfectly accord.

He is represented as having had three wives, the daughters of mythological personages: each of these wives had the name of Gwenhwyvar,† that is, the lady of the summit of the water. These three wives of Arthur are only so many copies of the same mystical character, the import of which may be perceived in the construction of the name.

* Cam. Biog. V. Arthur.

† Gwen-wy-var: the H in this word is merely formative.

And as for Arthur himself, Taliesin's Spoils of the Deep,* a poem which treats wholly of Diluvian mythology, represents this prince as presiding in the ship which brought himself, and seven friends, safe to land, when that deep swallowed up the rest of the human race. This has no connection with the history of the sixth century. It relates entirely to the deluge; and the personage here commemorated, was the same as his mystical parent, Uthyr Pendragon, or the deified patriarch Noah.

It appears from Taliesin, that Ceridwen also was esteemed a character of the most remote antiquity: for the Bard places the origin of her mysteries very remote in the primitive ages.

Cyvarchav i'm Rhên
 Ystyriaw Awen
 Py ddyddwg Angher
 Cyn no Cheridwen!
 Cyssevin ym Myd
 A yu ei Sywyd.

“ I implore my sovereign, to consider the inspiring muse
 “ (a title of this goddess)—what did necessity produce, “ more early than Ceridwen! The primary order in the “ world was that of her priests.”

These mystical characters, it must be acknowledged, were still regarded as existing in the sixth century; and so they would have been to this day, had they been still personified

* Appendix, No. 3.

† Taliesin's Mabgyvren, or Elements. W. Archæol. p. 24.

in their priests, and had the superstition which upheld them continued to prevail.*

To this short defence of the antiquity of the British mysteries, or rather of the characters to which they were consecrated, I must add, that I have thought it convenient to divide the story of Hanes Taliesin into chapters, in order to place the long annotations which it may require, as near as possible to the subject from which they arise. I have also translated the names of men and places: for this I need but little apology. Though many of these names occur in history, yet in the present, and in similar cases, they are evidently selected for the purpose of carrying on the allegory, without wholly removing the mystic veil: their import, therefore, ought to be known to the reader.

HANES TALIESIN.—CHAP. I.

“ In former times, there was a man of noble descent in “ Penllyn, the end of the lake. His name was Tegid Voel, “ bald serenity, and his paternal estate was in the middle of “ the lake of Tegid, or Pemble meer.

“ His espoused wife was named Ceridwen. By this wife
 “ he had a son, named Morvran ap Tegid, raven of the sea,
 “ the son of serenity, and a daughter called Creirwyw,† the

* Thus Ceridwen still exists in the middle of the twelfth century. See the poems of Hywel, in the conclusion of this section.

† In other passages, this name is written Creirwy, the token of the egg.

“ sacred token of life. She was the most beautiful damsel
“ in the world

“ But these children had a brother, named Avagddu, “ utter darkness, or black accumulation, the most hideous
“ of beings. Ceridwen, the mother of this deformed son, “ concluded in her mind, that he would have but little “ chance of being admitted into respectable company, un“ less he were endowed with some honourable accomplish“ ments, or sciences; for this was in the first period of “ Arthur, and the round table.”

This opening of the tale carries us at once into mythological ground. In the situation of Tegid's paternal estate, in the figure presented by that personage, and in the names and characters of his children, we have the history of the deluge presented to our view; and that history is sketched upon British canvas.

The Britons, as we have seen in the preceding section, represented the deluge as having been occasioned by the bursting forth of the waters of a lake. Hence they consecrated certain lakes, as symbols of the deluge; whilst the little islands which rose to the surface, and were fabled to have floated, or else artificial rafts, representing such floating islands, were viewed as emblems of the ark, and as mystical sanctuaries. They also regarded certain rocks, or mounts, attached to such lakes, as typifying the place of the patriarch's debarkation; and in the midst of these hallowed scenes, they celebrated the memorials of the deluge by some periodical rites. We are therefore told, that the paternal estate of Tegid Voel, the husband of Ceridwen, was in the centre of Pemble meer, the largest of the Welsh lakes. This estate must have been limited to the space of a raft, ship, or boat, which could have floated in such a situation; or else it must be supposed to have suffered that kind of submersion, by which our ancestors commemorated the destruction of the ancient world.

But the selection of Pemble meer, in this tale, is not made at random. That lake, and its vicinity, are deeply impressed with mythological memorials of the deluge.

Camden favours us with the description of it by an antiquarian poet, in which several circumstances exactly correspond with the British accounts of Llyn Llion, their Diluvian lake, and justify the choice of our mythologists, in making the one a type of the other.

- * “ Hispida qua tellus Mervinia respicit Eurum, “ Est Lacus, antiquo Penlinum nomine dictus.
 “ Hic Lacus illimis, in valle Tegëius altâ,
 “ Late expandit aquas, et vastum conficit orbem, “ Excipiens gremio latices, qui, fonte perenni,
 “ Vicinis recidunt de montibus, atque sonoris
 “ Illecebris captas, demulcent suaviter aures.
 “ Illud habet certè Lacus admirabile dictu, “ Quantumvis magnâ pluviâ non æstuat; atqui,

-
- * “ Where Eastern storms disturb the peaceful skies,
 “ In Merioneth famous Penlin lies.
 “ Here a vast lake, which deepest vales surround,
 “ His wat’ry globe rolls on the yielding ground,
 “ Increas’d with constant springs, that gently run
 “ From the rough hills with pleasing murmurs down:
 “ This wond’rous property the waters boast,
 “ The greatest rams are in its channels lost,
 “ Nor raise the flood; but when the tempests roar,
 “ The rising waves with sudden rage boil o’er,
 “ And conqu’ring billows scorn th’ unequal shore.” }
 6

“Aere turbato, si ventus murmura tollat, “Excrescit subito, rapidis violentior undis,
 “Et tumido superat contemptas flumine ripas.”

It is here that the sacred Dee rises, from two fountains, which retain the names of the god and goddess of the ark—here these fountains unite their venerated stream, which they roll, uncorrupted, through the midst of the Diluvian lake, till they arrive at the sacred mount of the debarkation.

And here we find one or two objects, which connect the terms of British mythology with those employed by other heathens.

Mr. Bryant observes from Josephus, that the place of descent from the ark, on Mount Ararat, was called Αποβατηριον; and from Pausanias, that the place where Danaus made his first descent in Argolis, was called Αποβαδμος. And that Danaus (whose sole history is referred to the deluge, and to Arkite superstition) is supposed to have brought with him the Amphiprumnon, or sacred model of the ark, which he lodged in the Acropolis of Argos, called Larissa.*

Hence our mythologist infers, that the place where the ark, or its representative, came to land, was distinguished by a name, which implied a descent, or going forth.

Agreeably to this idea, in the spot where Dwyvawr and Dwyvach, or the incorruptible Dee, emerges safe from the waters of the lake, we find the Bala, or going forth. The term is applied to the shooting, or coming forth of leaves and flowers, from the opening buds of plants; and at this Bala there is a large artificial mount, called Tomen y Bala; the tumulus of the Egress, which seems to have been dedicated to the honour of this sacred stream.

* Analysis. V. II, p. 329.

In the neighbourhood of this tumulus, rises the hill of Aren. But Mr. Bryant tells us, that Aren and Arene, are names of the ark, and that the city Arena is literally, the city of the ark.*

Our British Aren was sacred to Tydain Tad Awen, Titan, the father of the inspiring muse, or Apollo, † who, as we have already seen, was the Helio-arkite patriarch.

The bards speak of the sanctuaries of their gods, and canonized personages, by the name of Beddau, Graves, or resting places; just as the temples of Osiris, in Egypt, were regarded as the sepulchres of that god. And it is remarkable, that Taliesin joins the Bédd of Tidain, in the same stanza with that of Dylan, whom I have already proved to have been no other than the Diluvian patriarch.

Bed Tidain, Tad Awen
Yg godir Bron Aren :
Yn yd wna ton tolo,
Bed Dilan Llan Beuno. ‡

o

* Analysis, V. II. p. 328. 512.

† Thus we find a temple of Apollo upon Mount Parnæsus, where the ark of Dencaïon rested.

‡ W. Archaiol. p. 79.]

“ The resting place of Tydain, the father of the inspiring muse, is in the border of the mount of Aren: whilst the wave makes an overwhelming din, the resting place of Dylan is in the fane of Beuno,* the ox of the ship.”

Of Beunaw, the ox of the ship, that is, the arkite patriarch, venerated under the shape of that animal; the Welsh Heralds and Monks have made a celebrated saint a descendant of Tegid, and a founder of several churches. If ever there was such a saint, he must have borrowed his name from the mythology of his pagan ancestors.

That the name of Aren has an ancient mythological meaning, and probably the same which Mr. Bryant assigns to it, may be inferred from the singular coincidence, that as our Welsh Aren had a Bédd of Tydain or Apollo, so, on the top of the Arenès, in the borders of Britany, there are the ruins of an old fabric, which is positively decided to have been a temple of the same god.† From its situation, in the skirt of Armorica, and in the neighbourhood of Baieyx, it may be conjectured that this was that identical temple of Belen, or Apollo, in which Attiùs Patera the friend of Ausonius had presided. For that professor is called Bagocassis, and is said to have been Stirpe satus Druidun—Gentis Aremorica.‡

The Arenès of Britany, like that of Wales, may also have furnished their Druids with a local opportunity of

* Bú, an ox, and Naw, a ship.

† See Voyage dans le Finistere, Tom. I.

‡ Anson. Prof. 4 and 10.

commemorating the deluge, as they contain a natural phenomenon, which must just have suited their purpose. We are told, that “ a league West from this town, (Falaise) “ lies the mountain of Arenees. In the village of Arnes, “ belonging to this town, there is a lake, fed by subterraneous channels, which sometimes dries up, and is suddenly “ filled again.”*

But, to return to the lake of Tegid—we may infer from these coincident circumstances, that this lake and its neighbourhood were deeply impressed with the characters of arkite superstition; and that our mythological narrator was fully aware of this fact, when he placed the paternal estate of Tegid, the husband of Ceridwen, in the bosom of Pemble Meer.

Let us, therefore, take a brief view of the proprietor of this estate.

Tegid Vohel, bald serenity, presents himself at once to our fancy. The painter would find no embarrassment in sketching the portrait of this sedate, venerable personage, whose crown is partly stripped of its hoary honours. But of all the gods of antiquity, none could with propriety, sit for this picture, excepting Saturn, the acknowledged representative of Noah, and the husband of Rhea, which was but another name for Ceres, the genius of the ark.

As consort of the arkite goddess, Tegid was evidently the deified patriarch: it has, however, been observed, that this deity was a Pantheos, comprehending in his own person, most of the superior gods of the heathens; here then, we contemplate him in the character of Saturn. The particulars of Tegid's appropriate history have disappeared; but by a little mythological deduction, we shall discover him under another name.

* Atlas Geograph. Ed. 1711. p. 1062.

Tegid, as we have already seen, was the father of Creirwy, the token of the egg, or the British Proserpine; and Creirwy was the same personage as Llywy, the putting forth of the egg, mentioned by Aneurin and Taliesin, in conjunction with Hu or Aeddon.

This identity appears from the poems of Hywel, son of Owen, prince of North Wales, who styles Llywy his sister, and that, in consequence of his matriculation into the mysteries of Ceridwen.* She could not have become the mystical sister of Hywell by this means, had she not been the daughter of that goddess.

The same princely Bard says, that Llywy had stolen his soul, as she had stolen that of Garwy; but the mistress of Garwy was Creirwy, the daughter of Ceridwen.

Neud wyy dihuuwyv hoen Greirwy—hoiw—deg
A'm hudoedd val Garwy †

“Am I not deprived of spirit! I am enchanted like “Garwy, by her who equals Creirwy, sprightly and fair.”

Creirwy and Llywy being thus the same personage, it

* See the latter part of the present Section.

† W. Archaiol. p. 510.

follows, that the father of Creirwy was also the father of Llywy; but the parent of the latter is mentioned in the Triads, by the name of Seithwedd Saidi.* And here it must be remarked of the lady, that, notwithstanding her exquisite beauty and delicacy, she is classed with two other mythological personages, under the character of Gwr-vorwyn, a man-maid, which must imply a virago at least, if not something still less attractive.

From these premises it is clear, that Seithwedd Saidi was a name of Tegid, the father of this mystical lady; and this name, as well as Tegid, must be referred to the character of Saturn.

We shall now have an opportunity of investigating his mythology. Seithwedd is an epithet, implying either septiform, or else, having seven courses. This may allude to the multitude of his names and functions, or to the annual feasts of Saturn, which were continued for the space of seven days. If Saidi be a British term, it must be derived from Sâd, firm, or just. From this word, and Wrn, a covered vessel, Mr. Owen deduces the Welsh name of Saturn; so that Sad-wrn is the just man of the vessel. This description is not inapplicable to the patriarch Noah, and to his history, the character of Saturn is referred by mythologists in general, and particularly by Mr. Bryant, who takes notice, that Dagon, a representative of the same patriarch, was called Said-on,† which comes near to our Saidi.

Seithwedd, or as he is sometimes called Seithin Saidi, is represented as king of Dyved, Demetia; but this leads us again into the regions of mythology.

* W. Archæol. V. II. p. 15. 71.

† Analysis, V. II. p. 300.

Dyved was the patrimony of Pwyl, reason or patience, who embarked in the vale of Cwch, the boat, for Anwn, the great deep, which he governed for the space of a complete year, whilst Arawn, ארון the Arkite, styled also Pendaran, lord of the thunder, superintended his paternal dominions. Upon a future occasion I shall produce more of this tale. In the mean time, I may be allowed to suggest, that from the specimen here exhibited, Mr. Bryant would have pronounced it genuine arkite mythology.

The district of Dyved was so entirely devoted to the mysteries of Druidism, that it was said to have been anciently enveloped in Llengél, a concealing veil: and it was by way of eminence, denominated Gwlad Yr Húd, the land of mystery.

There is a story recorded in the triads, of Seithenin, the son of Seithwedd Saidi, which states, that upon a certain time, this prince was intoxicated, and that in his liquor, he let in the sea over the country, so as to overwhelm a large and populous district. This tale, which I must consider hereafter, is of the same origin with those local relations of the submersion of cities in the lakes of Britain, which I have remarked in the preceding section.

But Seithenin is nothing more than Septimianus, a title which the Romans conferred upon Saturn: so that Seithenin, and his mythological father, Seithwedd, are in reality, the same character.

I find a son of this Saidi under another name, which, together with his rank and connexions, is very remarkable. He is acknowledged as one of three sovereigns in the court of the mythological Arthur, that is, Noah, by the title of Cadeiriaith, the language of the chair, the son of Saidi; and Cadraith, the law of the inclosure, the son of Porthawr Godo, the doorkeeper of the partial covering, that is, the ark, or its representative.*

This doorkeeper was therefore, the same person with Saidi, and with Tegid, the husband of Ceridwen; and his name, and the office implied by that name, must be referred to Janus, the deity of the door or gate, whose character has been identified with that of Saturn.

Cadeiriaith, the son of Saidi, holds his dignity in conjunction with Gor-on-wy, great lord of the water, the son of Echel, with the pierced thigh; and with a third character, named Fleidwr Flam, the incloser of flame, son of Godo, the arkite cell.

As one of three amiable knights, in the court of the same Arthur, this personage is recognized under the name of Cadair, the chair or presidency, and as the son of Seithin Saidi; he is here classed with Gwalchmai, the hawk of May, the son of Gwyar, clotted gore; and with Garwy, water's edge, son of Geraint, the vessel, son of Erbyn, the lofty chiefs.†

This Cadair, or presidency of Saturn, was also named

* See W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 4 and 26.

† Ibid. p. 19 and 74.

Cibddar, the Mystic, and he had a son styled Elmur, the fixed or established spirit, ranked as one of the sovereign BULLS.* Here we come round to the history of Hu, the Tauriform, Helio-arkite god, and his sacred animals. The royal bull before us, as I have already observed, is connected with Cynhaval prototype, the son of Argat, the ark; and with Aräon, the cardinal point, in the Ecliptic, son of Taliesin, radiant front, which is a title of the solar deity, and hence, assumed by his priest and representative in the mysteries.

This little excursion in mythological ground, exhibits the various avenues, as pointing to one prominent object. The scattered notices in the mythological Triads, are so many parts of one connected system, and the mystical pedigrees are only intended to shew the relation of those parts amongst themselves. This is only the same story told in the British language, which Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber analyzed in the Greek, and resolved entirely into the mythology of the Diluvian age, mixed with Sabian idolatry.

We find then, that Tegid, the husband of Ceridwen, Seithwedd Saidi, and the doorkeeper of Godo, were one and the same personage, in whom we may have the features of the Saturn, or Janus, of classical antiquity.

But what our Druids intended, by their personification of the language of the chair, or law of the inclosure of Saturn; and by elevating this character to the dignity of a sovereign, it is difficult to say, unless by this figure, they meant to enforce the authority of their Bardd Cadair, presiding Bard or Druid, and to intimate that, he taught and governed by the maxims and laws of the Diluvian patriarch.

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 4, 13, and 69.

Such may have been their meaning; for to this august personage, the character of Saturn, or Janus, is pointedly referred, by our great mythologist, Mr. Bryant; who observes, that amongst all the various representations of the patriarch, there are none, wherein his history is delineated more plainly, than in those of Saturn and Janus, the latter of whom carried about him many emblems to denote his different departments. There was particularly, a staff in one hand, with which he pointed to a rock, from whence issued a profusion of water; in the other hand, he held a key. He had generally near him, some resemblance of a ship, and like our Tegid, he had the title of Θυραῖος, or the deity of the door or passage.*

Mr. Bryant also remarks, that though the Romans made a distinction between Janus and Saturn, they were only two titles of the same person; hence many of their emblems were the same. Saturn, like Janus, had keys in his hand, and his coins had the figure of a ship. He had the name of Septimianus; and the Saturnalia, which were days set apart for his rites in December, were in number seven. These rites are said to have been of great antiquity, far prior to the foundation of Rome. †

As our British Saturn was named Saidi, so his mystical spouse seems to have had a title of nearly the same sound; for her chair or sanctuary was called Caer Sidi, the sanc- tuary of Sidi; but according to Mr. Bryant, Σιδη, Sidē, was a legitimate title of Ceres.*

* See Analys. V. II. p. 253, &c.

† Ibid. p. 260.

The consideration of this subject I must defer for the present, and go on to examine, whether the children of Tegid and Ceridwen have any similar relation to the history of the deluge.

Their first born was named Morvran, raven of the sea. Of this personage, a few particulars are recorded. He was dark and hideous in his person; he was Ysgymmydd Aerau, addicted to contention; and he escaped from the army of the mythological Arthur, or the deified patriarch.

From these hints I conjecture, that the character of Morvran represents the raven which Noah sent forth. This was the first animal that proceeded from the ark: hence, mythology might regard him as her first-born son. And the short account which we have of him, is perfectly consistent with what Mr. Bryant has collected from the ancient mythology of other nations, upon the subject of Noah's raven.

It is remarked, that Noah sent the raven out of the ark, by way of experiment; but that it disappointed him and never returned—hence a tradition is mentioned, that the raven was once sent out upon a message by Apollo, but deserted him, and did not return when he was expected. †

But this faithless messenger was for the most part, esteemed a bird of ill omen. His very croaking would put a stop to the process of matrimony. But like Morvran, he was also personified by a human character. The mythologists, observes Mr. Bryant, out of every circumstance and title, formed a personage. Hence Pausanias speaks of the raven, as an ancient hero, and mentions his family.*

* See Analys. V. II. p. 380.

† Ibid. 286.

Morvran may then be regarded as the representative of Noah's raven; but what are we to understand by the forlorn condition of Avagddu, utter darkness, or black accumulation, whose misfortune was the grief of his mother; and who could not be relieved, as we learn from the sequel of the tale, till the renovating cauldron of the deluge had boiled for a year and a day. And what are we to think of his subsequent illuminated state, when he became the pride of Ceridwen, and if I mistake not, married the rainbow †

Avagddu is made a son of Tegid; but as mythological genealogy is mere allegory, and the father and son are frequently the same person under different points of view; this character, in his abject state, may be referred to the patriarch himself, during his confinement in the internal gloom of the ark, where he was surrounded with utter darkness, a circumstance which was commemorated in all the mysteries of the gentile world. If this be granted, then the son of Ceridwen, or the ark in his renovated state, is the same patriarch, born anew to light and life, at the close of the deluge.

* See Analys. V. II. p. 392.

† For these particulars, see the sequel of Hanes Taliesin, and that remarkable poem called the Chair of Ceridwen, which I shall produce in the course of this Section.

And as our complex mythology identified the character of the patriarch, with that of the sun; so Avagddu may also have been viewed as a type of that luminary, in his veil of darkness and gloom, during the melancholy period of the deluge. This gloom was afterwards changed into light and cheerfulness; and thus the son of Ceridwen may be recognized, in his illuminated state, under the titles of Elphin and Rhuwawn Bevyr, which implies bursting forth with radiancy, and seems to be an epithet of the Helio-arkite god.

The chair of Ceridwen represents Gwydion, or Hermes, in the act of forming the Iris, as a consort for the renovated sun; and the allegory is as just as it is beautiful: for what was the secondary cause of this sacred token, but the rays of the sun just bursting forth from the gloom, and mixing with the humid air?

Avagddu, thus considered as a type of the Helio-arkite god in his afflicted and renovated state, has a striking coincidence of character with Eros, the blind god of the Greeks, who was a distinguished agent in the Arkite mysteries, whose name, in the course of those mysteries, was changed into Phanes,* a title of the sun, not dissimilar to our El-phin; and whose symbol was the bow, which, as well as the bow of Apollo, alluded to the Iris. †

I am not sure, however, that the character of Avagddu had not a secondary allusion, in his forlorn state, to the uninitiated, and in his renovation, to the adept in the mysteries of Druidism: as the former was regarded as living in darkness, whereas the latter was illuminated and endowed with all knowledge.

* Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 331.

† Ibid. p. 343.

Creirwy, the token, or sacred symbol of the egg, otherwise called Llywy, the manifestation, or putting forth of the egg, is not the least remarkable of Ceridwen's children.

As it will appear presently, that the mother is described as a hen, or female bird of some species, there seems to be an analogous propriety in the names of the daughter, who, though a Gwrworyn, or virago, was esteemed a paragon of beauty: and, as such, she is classed with Arianrod merch Don, the lady of the silver wheel, the daughter of Jove; whom Ceridwen represents as conducting the rainbow, of which she was, therefore, the appropriate genius; and with Gwen, Venus, the daughter of Cy-wryd, Crydon, the manhood of Crodon, or Saturn.*

Creiwy, as daughter of Ceridwen, or Ceres, was the Proserpine of the British Druids. The attributes of the mother and daughter, in the Bardic mythology, as well as in that of other heathens, are so much confounded together, as not to be easily distinguished. Mr. Bryant pronounces them to have been the same mystical personage.†

All the difference which I can perceive in their character, is this. Ceridwen was the genius of the ark throughout its whole history; hence she was viewed as a severe matron,

* Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 260.

The author observes from Schedius, de Diis Germ. that Saturn had the name of Crodo. The parentage of the British Venus seems to have corresponded with that of the Greek.

† Ibid. p. 41.

supposed to preside in those public sanctuaries, where the Arkite rites were celebrated: whilst Creirwy, on the other hand, was regarded as the genius of the same sacred vessel, only during its perilous conflict with the waters of the deluge; and therefore represented as a helpless virgin, exposed to dreadful calamities, from which she was at length delivered. She did not preside in the Arkite temples, though she was occasionally associated with her mother; but the private and portable tokens delivered to the initiated, and the wand or branch, which was a badge of the Bardic office, were regarded as her gift.

This mystical lady is also called Creirddylad, the token of the flowing or floating, and described as the daughter of Lludd Llaw Eraint, the chief who governed the vessel, or of Llyr, the margin of the sea: and here she is an old acquaintance of the English nation, being no less a personage than Cordelia, the daughter of King Lear.

In an old poem, in which Gwyn ab Nudd, King of Annwn, is introduced as a speaker, this potentate describes himself as—

Gordderch Creirddylad merch Lludd,*

“The paramour of Creirddylad, the daughter of Lludd.”

Here we have a hint of a British tradition upon the subject of the rape of Proserpine. Gwyn ab Nudd was the Pluto of the Britons. Annwn, the kingdom of that god, in its popular acceptance, is hell, or the infernal regions; but in the mystical poems and tales, Annwn seems to be no other than that deep or abyss, the waters of which burst forth at the deluge. Gwyn, the King of Annwn, was therefore the genius of the deluge; and the fable means nothing more, than that the ark was forcibly carried away by the flood.

* W. Archaiol. p. 166.

But the more general name of the daughter of Ceridwen was Creirwy, the token or symbol of the egg; and under this symbol, the ark was represented in the general mythology of the heathens.

This assertion it may be necessary to support by the authority of Mr. Bryant, who observes, that in many hieroglyphical descriptions, the dove, Oinas, was represented as hovering over the mundane egg, which was exposed to the fury of Typhon, or the deluge; and that this egg was, doubtless, an emblem of the ark, whence proceeded that benign person, the preacher of righteousness, who brought mankind to a more mild kind of life. Having quoted, from Lucius Ampelius, a passage to this effect—Dicitur et Euphratis fluvio, Ovum piscis columbam assedissee dies plurimos, et exclusisse Deam benignam, et misericordem hominibus, ad vitam bonam; he thus accounts for the topography of the fable. The ark rested upon mount Baris, in Armenia, the Ararat of Moses; and in this country are the fountains of the Euphrates.

An egg, adds our author, as it contained the elements of life, was thought no improper emblem of the ark, in which were preserved the rudiments of the future world. Hence in the Dionusiaca, and in other mysteries, one part of the nocturnal ceremony consisted in the consecration of an egg. By this, we are informed by Porphyry, was signified the world. This world, says Mr. Bryant, was Noah and his family; even all mankind, inclosed and preserved in the ark. This seems to have been a favourite symbol, very ancient, and adopted among many nations. The Persians said of Oromasdes, that he formed mankind, and inclosed them in an egg. The Syrians used to speak of their ancestors, the gods, as the progeny of eggs.*

The same learned writer remarks, that in the the temple of the Dioscouri, in Laconia, there was suspended a large hieroglyphical egg, which was sometimes attributed to Leda, and sometimes to Nemesis, the deity of justice. It was sometimes described as surrounded by a serpent, either as an emblem of that providence, by which mankind was preserved, or else to signify a renewal of life, from a state of death; as the serpent, by casting his skin, seems to renew his life. By the bursting of the egg, was denoted the opening of the ark, and the disclosing to light whatever was within contained.†

From the contemplation of this symbol of foreign superstition, we naturally turn to the celebrated Ovum Anguinum, or serpent's egg, of the Celtic priesthood, as described by Pliny.

This was, by way of eminence, regarded as Insigne Druidis, the Insigne, or distinguishing mark of a Druid. Having already seen so much of the Arkite superstition amongst this order of men, we may easily conceive, that this sacred egg had a reference to the same subject, and that, like the mundane egg of other pagans, it was, in some sense, an emblem of the ark. We are told by Pliny, Experimen-tum ejus esse, si contra aquas fluitet, vel auro vinctum—That the test of its genuineness, was its floating against the water, even with its setting of gold. I suppose the author means, that it would keep upon the surface, when drawn against the stream; and that, in this passage, he gives us a hint of its mystical import and character, as an emblem of a floating vessel.

* Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 319, &c.

† Ibid. p. 360.

It must also be procured, we are told, Certâ Lunâ, at a certain time of the moon. This information exhibits the connexion of mythological ideas; for the moon was a symbol of Ceridwen, and of the ark.

The efficacy of the Anguinum, ad victorias litium, et Regum aditus, may easily be conceived. The Druids, who were the supreme judges in all litigated causes, may be supposed to have lent a favourable ear to those who produced this credential of their order; and even kings, who stood in awe of their tribunal, would seldom close their gates against them.

The natural historian recites at large the fabulous story of the production of this trinket—Angues innumeri, astate, convoluti, &c.

The same mummary is repeated by the ancient Bards.—
 “Lively was the aspect of him who, in his prowess, had “snatched over the ford that involved ball, which casts its “rays to a distance, the splendid product of the adder, shot
 “forth by serpents.”*

P

* Appendix, No. 14.

But this was merely so much dust thrown into the eyes of the profane multitude.

The Druids themselves are called Nadredd, adders, by the Welsh Bards. This title they owed, I suppose, to their regenerative system of transmigration. The serpent, which annually casts his skin, and seems to return to a second youth, may have been regarded by them, as well as by other heathens, as a symbol of renovation: and the renovation of mankind was the great doctrine set forth by the Arkite mysteries, and by the symbolical egg.

The Druids, therefore, were the serpents which assembled, at a stated time in the summer, to prepare these emblems of Creirwy, and to conceal within them certain discriminative tokens, which probably were kept as a profound secret from the persons who received them.

Pliny saw one of these eggs, but he had not the curiosity to examine it any farther than its cartilaginous integument; otherwise he would probably have discovered, that it contained either a lunette of glass, or small ring of the same material; such as those which the Welsh call Gleiniau Nadredd. These were certainly insignia of a very sacred character amongst our ancestors; and they seem to have been intimately connected with the Anguinum: for the annotator upon Camden remarks, that in most parts of Wales, all over Scotland, and in Cornwall, the vulgar still retain the same superstitious notions respecting the origin and virtues of the former, which Pliny records of the latter.* And the Glwin was viewed as an emblem of renovation: hence

* Gibson's Camden Col. 815.—See also Owen's Dict. V. Glain.

Meilyr calls Bardsey—"The holy island of the Glain, in "which there is a fair representation of a resurrection."*

That these Glains were artificial, can hardly admit of a doubt; though some have hastily confounded them with certain productions of nature. We find some of them blue, some white, a third sort green, and a fourth regularly variegated with all these sorts of colours; but still preserving the appearance of glass: whilst others again were composed of earth, and only glazed over.†

It seems most likely, that the secret of manufacturing these Glains was totally unknown in Britain, excepting to the Druids:‡ and it may be collected from some passages, that these priests carried about them certain trinkets of vitrified matter, and that this custom had a view to their Arkite mysteries.

Thus, in the poem called the chair of Taliesin, we find the stranger admitted to the ceremonies of lunar worship, upon his exhibiting the Cwrwg Gwydryn, or boat of glass, a symbol which certainly commemorated the sacred vessel, and probably displayed the figure of a small lunette; as the ark was sometimes described under that figure, and called Selene, the moon.§

P 2

* W. Archaiol. p. 193.

† See Camden, as cited before.

‡ "With similar reverence the Samothracians, whose devotion to the Cabiric rites is well known, regarded their magical rings. These were of the nature of amulets, and were believed to have a power of averting danger."

Faber's Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 218.

§ Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 553.

I suppose that it was from the material, of which this symbol was composed, that even the vessel, in which the patriarch and his family were preserved, was denominated Caer Wydyr, the inclosure, or circle of glass.* And Merddin Emrys, and his nine Bards, are represented as having put to sea in the Ty Gwydrin,† or house of glass; which could have been no other than a ship or vessel consecrated to Bardic mysteries.

The portable trinket which I have mentioned, whatever its form may have been, was the Crair, or Insignè of the Druids; and when made or dressed up in the figure of an egg, it became Creir-wy, the Insignè or token of the egg, the sacred emblem of the British Proserpine. From the pre-eminent estimation in which this emblem was held, both in Gaul and in our own island, we may draw a reasonable inference, that the Arkite mysteries were the most sacred arcana of the Celtic priesthood.

In the short chapter which gave rise to these remarks, our mythological narrator appears, with a master's hand, to have directed our attention to the history of the deluge, and to the local notions of the Britons relative to that event. We shall now observe his dexterity in delineating the character and operations of Ceridwen herself.

* Appendix, No. 3.

† W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 59.

HANES TALIESIN.—CHAP. II.

“ Then she (Ceridwen) determined, agreeably to the mystery of the books of Pheryllt, to prepare for her son a cauldron of Awen a Gwybodeu, water of inspiration and sciences, that he might be more readily admitted into honourable society, upon account of his knowledge, and his skill in regard to futurity.

“ The cauldron began to boil, and it was requisite that the boiling should be continued, without interruption, for the period of a year and a day; and till three blessed drops of the endowment of the spirit could be obtained.

“ She had stationed Gwion the Little, the son of Gwreang the Herald, of Llanvair, the funerary of the lady, in Caer Einiawn, the city of the just, in Powys, the land of rest, to superintend the preparation of the cauldron: and she had appointed a blind man, μυσος, named Morda, ruler of the sea, to kindle the fire under the cauldron, with a strict injunction that he should not suffer the boiling to be interrupted, before the completion of the year and the day.

“ In the mean time Ceridwen, with due attention to the books of astronomy, and to the hours of the planets, employed herself daily in botanizing, and in collecting plants of every species, which possessed any rare virtues.

“ On a certain day, about the completion of the year; whilst she was thus botanizing and muttering to herself,

“ three drops of the efficacious water happened to fly out of “ the cauldron, and alight upon the finger of Gwion the “ Little. The heat of the water occasioned his putting his “ finger into his mouth.

“ As soon as these precious drops had touched his lips, “ every event of futurity was opened to his view: and he “ clearly perceived, that his greatest concern was to beware
 “ of the stratagems of Ceridwen, whose knowledge was “ very great. With extreme terror he fled towards his na“ tive country.

“ As for the cauldron, it divided into two halves; for the “ whole of the water which it contained, excepting the “ three efficacious drops, was poisonous; so that it poisoned
 “ the horses of Gwyddno Garanhir, which drank out of the “ channel into which the cauldron had emptied itself.
 “ Hence that channel was afterwards called, The poison of “ Gwyddno's horses.”

The most remarkable subject brought forward in this chapter, is the preparation of the cauldron of inspiration and science; but before I consider the import of this mystical vase, I must make a few short remarks.

Ceridwen employs a minister, who is described as the son of a herald, and it may be implied that he himself held that office. It is observed by antiquaries, that of four priests who officiated in the celebration of the mysteries of Ceres, one was distinguished by the title of Keryx the Herald. Another was named Hydranus, from ὕδωρ, water:

and his title, though perhaps not his function, corresponded with that of Morda in the present tale.

The keeping up of a continual fire, for the period of a year and a day, in a ceremony which was repeated annually, amounts to the same thing as maintaining a perpetual fire. And this was a solemn rite in the temples of Ceres.

Ceridwen, like Ceres and Isis, appears to have been a great botanist, and well skilled in the virtues of plants. The Pheryllt, according to whose ritual she proceeds in her selection, are often mentioned by the Bards, as well as by the prose writers of Wales. The poet Virgil, whose sixth Æneid treats so largely of the mysteries of heathenism, has been dignified with this title; and an old chronicle, quoted by Dr. Thomas Williams, asserts that the Pheryllt had an establishment at Oxford, prior to the founding of the university by Alfred.

These Pheryllt are deemed to have been the first teachers of all curious arts and sciences; and, more particularly, are thought to have been skilled in every thing that required the operation of fire. Hence some have supposed, that the term implies chymists or metallurgists. But chymistry and metallurgy seem rather to have taken their British name from these ancient priests, being called Celvyddyddau Pheryllt, the arts of the Pheryllt, or some of those mysteries in which they were eminently conversant.

As primary instructors in the rites of Ceridwen, or Ceres, I regard the Pheryllt as priests of the Pharaon, or higher powers, who had a city or temple amongst the mountains of Snowdon, called also Dinas Emrys, or the ambrosial city. And, therefore, they were the same, in effect, as the priests of the Cabiri.

Mr. Bryant assures us, that the supposed genius of the ark was worshipped under several titles, and that the principal of her priests were the Cabiri, whose office and rites were esteemed particularly sacred; and of great antiquity. They were the same as the Curetes, Corybantes, Telchines, and Idæi Dactyli of Crete. In treating of these, continues my author, much confusion has ensued, from not considering, that both the deity and the priests were comprehended under the same title. The original Cabiritic divinity was no other than the patriarch, who was of so great repute for his piety and justice. Hence, the other Cabiri, his immediate offspring, are said to be the sons of Sadyc, by which is signified the just man. This is the very title given to Noah. All science, and every useful art, was attributed to him, and through his sons transmitted to posterity.*

The Telchinian and Cabiritic rites, we are told by the same author, consisted in arkite memorials. They passed from Egypt and Syria into Phrygia and Pontus, from thence into Thrace, and the cities of Greece. They were carried into Hetruria, and into the regions of the Celtæ.†

Whatever route these ancient priests may have pursued; and whether they belonged to the original establishment of the nations here mentioned, or were imported from other people; their rites, as described by the learned author, are clearly to be distinguished amongst the Celtæ of Britain;

* Analys. V. II. p. 461.

† Ibid. p. 471.

and with those Pheryllt or Druids, who directed the mysteries of Ceridwen.

The tale before us also mentions, books of astronomy. Whether the Druids actually had such books or not, it is certain that Cæsar enumerates astronomy amongst the sciences which they professed; and that they not only remarked the periodical return of their festivals, but also mixed with their arkite superstition, an idolatrous veneration of the heavenly bodies, and paid a religious regard to their influence.

I come now to the cauldron of Ceridwen, which makes a very conspicuous figure in the works of the mystical Bards, from the beginning of the sixth, to the close of the twelfth century. In these authors, we find the term pair, or cauldron, used metaphorically to imply the whole mass of doctrine and discipline, together with the confined circle of arts and sciences, which pertained to the ancient priesthood of Britain. The preparation of this vase being a necessary preliminary, to the celebration of their most sacred mysteries, it stands as a symbol of the mysteries themselves, and of all the benefits supposed to result from them.

Hence it becomes a subject of some importance in British antiquities, to inquire into the meaning of this mystical vessel, and to determine the question, whether the ancient superstition of other heathens present us with any thing analogous to it.

From the best information which I can collect upon the subject, it does not appear that this cauldron implies one identical vessel, or at least, that its contents were designed for one simple purpose. In the tale before us it is described, as used in the preparation of a decoction of various select plants, which was to constitute the water of inspiration and science. A few drops of this water fall upon the finger of the attendant, he puts it into his mouth, and immediately all futurity is open to his view. Such knowledge, however, must not be regarded as the result of merely tasting the water, or of any single ceremony whatever; but of a complete course of initiation, of which the tasting of this water was an essential rite.

The poem called Taliesin's Chair, enumerates a multitude of ingredients, which entered into the mystical decoction, and seems to describe it as designed, for purification by sprinkling, then, for the preparation of a bath, and again, as used in the rite of libation, and lastly, as constituting a particular kind of drink for the aspirants. The sacred vessel is there called Pair Pumwydd, the cauldron of the five trees or plants, alluding, I suppose, to five particular species of plants, which were deemed essentially requisite in the preparation.

Some of the mythological tales represent this pair, as constituting a bath, which conferred immortality or restored dead persons to life, but deprived them of utterance:* alluding to the oath of secrecy, which was administered previous to initiation.

In the poem called Preiddeu Annwn,† Taliesin styles it

* See Mr. Turner's Vindication, p. 283.

† Appendix, No. 3.

the cauldron of the ruler of the deep, (the arkite god) which first began to be warmed, by the breath of nine damsels (the Gwyllion, or Gallicenæ).* He describes it as having a ridge of pearls round its border, and says, that it will not boil the food of the coward, who is not bound by his oath.

Yet the author of Hanes Taliesin, speaks of the residue of the water, after the efficacious drops had been separated, as a deadly poison.

From these various accounts, it may be inferred, that the pair, was a vessel employed by the Druids, in preparing a decoction of potent herbs and other ingredients, to which superstition attributed some extraordinary virtues; that this preparation was a preliminary to the mysteries of the arkite goddess; that in those mysteries, part of the decoction was used for the purpose of purification by sprinkling; that another part was applied to the consecration of the mystic bath: that a small portion of the same decoction, was infused into the vessels which contained the liquor, exhibited in the great festival, for the purpose of libation, or for the use of the priests and aspirants, which liquor, is described as consisting of Gwin a Bragawd, that is, wine with mead, and wort, fermented together: that all the sacred vessels employed in the mysteries of Ceridwen, being thus purified and consecrated by the pair, passed under its name; and that, in these appropriations, the water of the cauldron was deemed the water of inspiration, science, and immortality, as conducing to the due celebration of mysteries, which were supposed to confer these benefits upon the votaries.

* See the preceding Section.

But it seems that the residue of the water, being now supposed to have washed away the mental impurities of the initiated, with which impurities, of course it became impregnated, was now deemed deleterious, and accursed. It was therefore emptied into a deep pit or channel in the earth, which swallowed it up, together with the sins of the regenerate.

If we look for something analogous to this in the ancient mysteries of Ceres, we shall find, that the first ceremony was that of purification by water, that this rite was performed, both by sprinkling and immersion; and that the water used for this purpose, underwent a certain degree of preparation, similar to that of the cauldron of Ceridwen.

In the ceremony of purification, says M. De Gebelin, they used laurel, salt, barley, sea-water, and crowns of flowers. They even passed through the fire, and were at last, plunged into the water, whence the hierophant, who was charged with this office, had the name of Hydranos, or the Baptist.*

The sacred vessel which contained this mixture of salt, barley, sea-water, and other ingredients not specified, must have corresponded with the mystical cauldron of the Britons, amongst the contents of which I find certain "berries, the "foam of the ocean, cresses of a purifying quality, wort, "and chearful, placid vervain, which had been borne aloft, "and kept apart from the Moon."†

* Monde Primitif. Tom. IV. p. 318. |

† Cadair Taliesin, W. Archaiol. p. 37.

Thus far, the analogy between the purifying water of the Greeks and Britons, may be traced. But the mystical cauldron of Ceridwen was also employed in preparing the liquor of those magnanimous aspirants, who took and kept the oath. It was one of its functions to boil that beverage, or else a certain portion of its contents was added, by way of consecration to the Gwîn a Bragawd, or composition of wine, honey, water, and the extract of malt, or barley.

However this consecration may have been effected, the correspondence between the mystical beverage of the Greeks and Britons, will appear still more close.

We are told by Clemens Alexandrinus, that as a prelude to initiation, the aspirant was asked, if he had eaten of the fruits of Ceres, to which he answered—Εκ τυμπανου εφαγον, εκ κυμβαλου επιον, εκενοφορησα, υπο τον πακτον υπιδυον.—"I have eaten " out of the drum, I have drunk out of the cymbal, I have " carried the kernos, I have been covered in the bed."

M. De Gebelin explains the cymbal, as signifying a vessel, in the form of a large goblet, out of which the aspirants drank a liquor, called kykeon, which was a mixture of wine, honey, water, and meal; precisely the Gwîn a Bragawd of the British Bards.

The ancients and mythologists, as my author observes, tell us, that these symbols were intended as memorials of what had happened to Ceres, who, upon her arrival in Attica, when she was wandering in search of her daughter, received this liquor from a woman named Baubo,* and drank it off at a single draught.†

The vessel used in the preparation of this mixture, which was presented to Ceres, is described by Antoninus Liberalis as Δίερα Καδυν, a deep kettle or boiler; this might, with propriety, be denominated the cauldron of that goddess.

But we are told, the residue of the water in Ceridwen's vessel, was of a poisonous quality. It now contained the sins and pollutions of the noviciates: the cauldron was therefore divided into two equal parts, and the water ran out of it into a certain terrestrial channel.

This dividing of the water, and pouring of it into a channel in the earth, was a solemn rite, perfectly analogous to the practice of the ancients in the mysteries of Ceres.

The ninth and last day of the celebration of the greater mysteries, when all the ablutions and purifications had been completed, was called Plemochoe, from the name of a large earthen vessel, of considerable depth, and widening from the bottom upwards.

On this day, the last of the feast, as we are informed by Athenæus,‡ they filled two of these vessels with water, and having placed one of them towards the East, and the other towards the West, they moved them sideways successively, reciting certain prayers. When these were concluded, they poured the water into a kind of pit, or channel, pro-

* Bobo, in the Hiberno-Celtic, implies a mystery.

† Monde Primitif. as cited before.

‡ Lib. XI. chap. 15.

nouncing this prayer, which is contained in the Pirithous, of Euripides—

“ May we be able, auspiciously, to pour the water of these vessels into the terrestrial sink.”*

Thus it appears that the cauldron of Ceridwen, which was, properly speaking, a vessel used in preparing a kind of purifying and consecrating water, is to be understood, in a figurative sense, as corresponding with the several sacred vessels employed in the mysteries of Ceres: and that genius, science, and immortality, the benefits supposed to be derived from that cauldron, are to be considered as the imaginary result of initiation into those mysteries.

But it has already been observed, that Taliesin describes this cauldron as having been warmed, for the first time, by the breath of nine damsels. This must imply, that the mysteries connected with the cauldron, were supposed to have been originally instituted by certain female hierophants. These were undoubtedly the Gwyllion, from whose songs the patriarch is fabled to have derived his presage of the deluge, and who continued to be represented by fanatical priestesses, bearing the same title, and styled Gallicenæ by Pomponius Mela.

Here it will probably occur to the reader, that these nine mystical damsels allude to the nine muses; or that they were merely their representatives in British mythology.

The muses, indeed, were regarded as promoters of genius, as the patronesses of science, and as conferring a kind of immortality: their sacred fountain was the fountain of inspiration; but what had they to do with the mysteries of Ceres?

* See Monde Prim. Tom. IV. p. 329.

As I wish to point out the general analogy between British fable, and that mass of superstition which pervaded other heathen countries, I must be allowed to suggest, that the muses were originally nothing more than priestesses of Arkite temples, or attendants on those deified characters, whose history is decisively referred, both by Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber, to that of the ark, and the Diluvian age.

The first songs which the muses inspired, were in the form of sacred hymns, containing the titles and actions of the gods, and describing the rites with which they were worshipped: if therefore, those gods, and those rites, were Arkite, the songs of the muses must have been the same.

Deucalion's vessel, which was evidently the ark of Noah, or its representative in a Thessalian temple, is said to have rested upon Mount Parnassus: and the favourite haunt of the muses was about the Castalian spring, upon that mountain.

Mr. Bryant remarks, that when the Athenians sent their first colony into Ionia, the muses led the way in the form of bees—Melissæ: and adds, that the Melissæ were certainly female attendants in the Arkite temples.*

In the next page, the learned author tells us, that as the priestesses of Damater (Ceres), who sung the sacred hymns, were called Melissæ, so that goddess and Persephone, had the title of Melittodes, from the songs made in their honour.

* Analysis, V. II. p. 376.

The Melissæ, or muses, were therefore the priestesses of Ceres.

Osiris was an avowed representative of the Diluvian patriarch; and his consort, Isis, was the same character as Ceres, the genius of the ark: accordingly, we find the same nine damsels amongst their establishment in Egyptian mythology. Diodorus tells us, that Osiris was always attended by a company of musicians, amongst whom were nine damsels, accomplished in every art relative to music; that this was the reason why the Greeks called them the nine muses, and that their president was Apollo, the king's brother.

Taliesin is not, therefore, unclassical, when he represents the nine damsels as having first warmed the mystical cauldron of the ruler of the deep, and the Arkite goddess. And this circumstance adds another link of connexion between the mythology of Britain, and that of Greece and Egypt.

But whence came the original idea of the purifying water, prepared in this celebrated cauldron?

In the tradition of our ancestors, we find that the mystical vase was peculiarly sacred to the god and goddess of the ark. It must then be referred to something in the history of the deluge; for the discovery of which, it may be proper to take a brief view of the ideas which the Britons entertained respecting that awful event.

The following circumstances may be verified by passages in the Bards and the Triads.

The profligacy of mankind had provoked the great Supreme to send a pestilential wind upon the earth. A pure poison descended—every blast was death. At this time the patriarch, distinguished for his integrity, was shut up together with his select company, in the inclosure with the strong door. Here the just ones were safe from injury. Presently, a tempest of fire arose. It split the earth asunder, to the great deep. The lake Llion burst its bounds; the waves of the sea lift themselves on high, round the borders of Britain; the rain poured down from heaven, and the water covered the earth. But that water was intended as a lustration, to purify the polluted globe, to render it meet for the renewal of life, and to wash away the contagion of its former inhabitants into the chasms of the abyss. The flood, which swept from the surface of the earth the expiring remains of the patriarch's contemporaries, raised his vessel, or inclosure, on high, from the ground, bore it safe upon the summit of the waves, and proved to him and his associates the water of life and renovation.

Agreeably to these ideas, the cauldron which was kept boiling for a year and a day; which purified the sacred utensils, and the company assembled at the mystic festival; and with its dregs washed away the sins of the regenerate into the terrestrial channel, may have been regarded as an emblem of the deluge itself.

This comes very near to the view which the learned and indefatigable Mr. Maurice has taken of some ancient Hindoo traditions.

But how are we to account for such a coincidence in the mythology of nations, so widely separated? Perhaps it would not be an unreasonable supposition, that the rudiments of those fanciful systems, which prevailed over the Gentile world, whatever changes they may have afterwards undergone from local corruption and mutual intercourse, were laid before the nations separated from the patriarchal stock. How are we otherwise to account for the prevalence of the same fabulous relations, and commemorative symbols, in the East of Asia, and amongst a sequestered people in the West of Europe? I am aware that this difficulty has generally been resolved by the supposition, that certain Eastern sages, in some distant age, found their way into these remote regions. But the experience of our countrymen and neighbours, for the last three hundred years, may serve to convince us, that a new religion, essentially different from that of an established society, whether polished or barbarous, is not easily introduced. However this may have been, it is curious to observe, in the old poems and tales of the Britons, and in the ancient books of the Hindoos, the same train of superstitious ideas.

The author of the Indian antiquities having told us, that the Soors, being assembled in solemn consultation, were meditating the discovery of the Amreeta, or water of immortality; remarks, that under this allegory is shadowed out the re-animation of nature, after the general desolation made by the deluge. The sea was to be deeply agitated by the impetuous rotation of the mountain Mandar.

The author then recites the gigantic fable, which concludes thus. "And now, a heterogeneous stream, of the "concocted juice of various trees and plants, ran down into "the briny flood. It was from this milk-like stream of “juices, produced from those streams, trees, and plants,

 “and a mixture of melted gold, that the Soors obtained
 “their immortality.”

“Concerning these extravagant mythological details of “the Hindoos (continues Mr. Maurice), I must remark, “that however mysterious the allegory, and however wild
 “and romantic the language in which it is clothed, this “fact may be depended upon, that there in general lies “concealed at the bottom some physical meaning, or deep “theological truth.—What can this general and stupendous “convulsion of nature shadow out, except the desolation
 “of the earth, during the period of the universal deluge!
 “Who is that physician, so renowned in ancient Sanscrit “histories, the great Dew Danwantaree, who at length “rose from the churned ocean, the white foam of which “resembled milk, bearing in his hand a sacred vase, full of “the water of life—unless it be the venerable sage, who “rose from the ocean, who gave new life to his expiring “species, and in his family upheld the human race?—That “great botanist, who first planted the vine, and returned “to the ground that infinite variety of medical herbs, and “innumerable seeds, which—Menu is represented, as taking “into the ark, for the express purpose of renovating de-“cayed vegetation after the deluge.—Such is the true “meaning of this Avatar; and such—is the true Danwan- “taree of India, who sprung from the foam of the churned “ocean, bearing the Amreeta, or vital ambrosia, to the “renovated world.”*

To the reader, who is not furnished with the Indian antiquities, I need not apologize for the length of these extracts; and, I trust, the learned author will excuse my making so free with his labours, in consideration of the light which they reflect upon the renovating cauldron of Ceridwen, and the ruler of the deep, and perhaps also upon the KUXEAW, or sacred mixture of the Arkite goddess, and her renovating mysteries. But to return to the British story.

* Indian Antiq. V. II. p. 270, &c.

HANES TALIESIN.—CHAP. III.

“ Ceridwen entering just at this moment, and perceiving “ that her whole year’s labour was entirely lost, seized an “ oar, and struck the blind Morda upon his head, so that “ one of his eyes dropped upon his cheek.

“ Thou hast disfigured me wrongfully, exclaimed Morda, “ seeing I am innocent: thy loss has not been occasioned by “ any fault of mine.”

“ True, replied Ceridwen, it was Gwion the Little who “ robbed me. Having pronounced these words, she began
 “ to run in pursuit of him.

“ Gwion perceiving her at a distance, transformed him“ self into a hare, and doubled his speed: but Ceridwen “ instantly becoming a greyhound bitch, turned him, and “ chased him towards a river.

“ Leaping into the stream, he assumed the form of a “ fish: but his resentful enemy, who was now become an “ otter bitch, traced him through the stream; so that he “ was obliged to take the form of a bird, and mount into

 “ the air.

“ That element afforded him no refuge; for the lady, in “ the form of a sparrow hawk was gaining upon him—she “ was just in the act of pouncing him.

“ Shuddering with the dread of death, he perceived a “ heap of clean wheat upon a floor, dropped into the midst
 “ of it, and assumed the form of a single grain.

“ Ceridwen took the form of a black, high-crested hen, “ descended into the wheat, scratched him out, distin“ guished and swallowed him. And, as the history relates,
 “ she was pregnant of him nine months, and when delivered
 “ of him, she found him so lovely a babe, that she had not “ resolution to put him to death.

“ She placed him, however, in a coracle, covered with a “ skin, and, by the instigation of her husband, cast him
 “ into the sea on the twenty-ninth of April.”

Through the fabulous wildness of this chapter, we may discover constant allusions to the history of Ceres, and her mystical rites. Ceridwen here assumes the character of a fury. Under that idea, she is elsewhere represented. Taliesin says of himself, that he had been nine months in the womb of Ceridwen Wrach, the hag, or fury. This fury was the goddess of death. The death of Arthur is implied, by his contending with the fury in the hall of Glaston- bury.* And, as Ceridwen was the genius of a sacred ship, so death, of which she was the goddess, is represented under the character of the ship of the earth.

Pawb a ddaw i'r Ddaear Long,† says the Bard—"Every one will come into the ship of the earth;" that is, all men must die.

All this is strictly applicable to Ceres, considered as the genius of the ark. She was sometimes enrolled in the list of the Furies.‡ Under this character she seems to have represented the terror and consternation, to which the patriarch and his family were exposed during the deluge.

She was also the goddess of death. When the ark was constructed, Noah made a door in its side; a circumstance continually commemorated by the Gentile writers. The entrance through this door, they esteemed a passage to death and darkness.§ Hence the aspirants, in the mysteries of Ceres and Isis, as well as Gwion, in our British tale, were terrified with the image of death.

" Nothing can be conceived more solemn, than the rites of initiation into the greater mysteries, as described by Apuleius and Dion Chrysostom, who had gone through the awful ceremony: nothing more tremendous and appalling, than the scenery exhibited before the eyes of the terrified aspirant. It was a rude and fearful march, through night and darkness—and now, arrived on the verge of

* W. Archaiol. p. 67

† Ibid. p. 322.

‡ Bryant's Analysis, V. I. p. 483.

§ Ibid. V. II p. 257.

“ death and initiation, every thing wears a dreadful aspect ;
 “ it is all horror, trembling, and astonishment:—* Accessi
 “ confinium mortis, says Apuleius, et calcato proserpine
 “ limine, per omnia vectus elementa remeavi.”†

But let us proceed to consider the incidents of the story—
 Ceridwen seizes an oar, and strikes the Dæmon of the sea upon his head.

The instrument was a proper symbol to be employed by the genius of a floating vessel, and the action an emblem of her triumph over the watery element.

The goddess then transforms herself into a bitch. However degrading the symbol, these animals seem to have had a particular connexion with the mysteries of Ceres and Isis.

Virgil, in the sixth book of his Æneid, describes all that it was lawful to reveal of the Eleusinian mysteries; and we find that the first terrific objects which presented themselves to the senses of his hero, whilst the priestess was conducting him towards the mystic river, were in the form of bitches.—‡ Visæque canes ululare per umbras. §

Upon this passage, M. De Gebelin remarks—¶ Pléthon

* “I approached the confines of death, and having nearly trodden the threshold of Proserpine, I returned, being carried through all the elements.”

† See Ind. Antiq. V. II. p. 312, &c.

‡ And bitches seem to howl amidst the gloom.

§ V. 257.

¶ Pléthon, in his notes upon the magical oracles of Zoroaster, also speaks of the dogs mentioned by Virgil. It is the custom, says he, in the celebration of the mysteries, to exhibit to the initiated certain fantoms, in the figure of dogs, and many other monstrous spectres and apparitions.

(Scholies sur les oracles magiques de Zoroastre) parle aussi des chiens, dont Virgile fait mention. C'est la contume, dit il, dans la celebration des mystères, de faire paroître devant les initiés, des fantômes, sous la figure des chiens, et plusieurs autres spectres et visions monstreuses."*

In the sculpture which, according to this author, represents the Eleusinian cave, Ceres is attended by a dog, and the aspirant in the form of a child, is brought into the cave by another dog.†

Plutarch tells us, that Isis was assisted by certain dogs, in the discovery of Anubis, the child of Osiris, whom his mother had exposed, because she dreaded the anger of Typhon.

This child, the goddess adopted and educated; he became her companion and faithful guard. He had the name of Anubis, because he displayed the same vigilance in the cause of the gods, which dogs manifested in behalf of their human masters.

The tale, as here related, can only be regarded as the history of an aspirant, who was initiated into the mysteries of Isis, instructed in the rites and discipline of her temple, and afterwards became her priest.

Mr. Bryant quotes the authority of Diodorus, who informs us, that at the grand celebration of Isis, the whole solemnity was preceded by dogs. This author indeed, produces many instances of gods, and their representatives, the priests being termed κυνες, dogs; but he attributes this title to the ignorance of the Greeks, who, according to him, mistook the Hebrew and Egyptian term, cohen, a priest, for κυνων, which in their own language, implies a dog.*

* Monde Primitif. Tom. IV. p. 336.

† Ibid. p. 339.

But, as the mythology of other nations, not intimately connected with the Greeks, and who did not use their vocabulary, furnishes us with a similar application of equivalent titles; and as gods and priests, with dogs' heads, appear in Egyptian, and other foreign monuments; it may be suspected, that there was something more in these titles, than a mere blunder of the Greeks.

Agreeably to Plutarch's hint, there may have been some allusion to the fidelity, vigilance, and sagacity of the animal. And whatever served to keep aloof profane intrusion, and defend the awful sanctity of the temple, may have been symbolized by the guardian dog. Thus the dog of Gwyn ab Nudd, the British Pluto, is named Dor-Marth,† the gate of sorrow: this was no real dog, but probably the same as the Proserpinæ Limen, which Apuleius approached in the course of initiation.

These particulars may suffice to account for the device of our British mythologist, in transforming Ceridwen, the Ceres or Isis of the Druids, into a bitch; whilst the aspirant was converted into a hare. This animal, as we learn from Cæsar, was deemed sacred by the Britons; at the same time it was an emblem of timidity, intimating the great terror to which the novice was exposed, during the mystical process.

* See Analysis, V. I. p. 40. 103. 329, &c.

† W. Archæiol. p. 166.

This hare is turned, and driven towards a river. But he is still in the road to initiation. After the preparation of the consecrated water, and the Kυνεων, the first ceremony in the mysteries of the Greeks, was that of purification, which was celebrated, upon the banks of rivers. The Athenians performed this ceremony at Agra, on the Ilissus, a river of Attica. Hence the banks of that river were called the mystic banks, and the stream itself had the name of Θεσπεσιος, the divine.

Here our novice takes the form of a fish, whilst the goddess herself, or rather her priest, assumes the character of an otter. If κυνες, dogs, represented heathen priests in general, and especially those of Ceres and Isis; the otter, or water dog, may very aptly typify the priest, called Hydranos, who always attended those mysteries, and whose office it was to plunge the aspirant into the stream.

The next change of the aspirant was into a bird. The species is not named. It was probably the Dryw, which implies both a wren and a Druid; and Taliesin tells us that he had been in that form. His adversary became a hawk; but we are told, that the hawk was a known symbol of Isis.*

At last, the novice becomes a grain of pure wheat, and mixes with an assemblage of the same species and character. He was now cleansed from all his impurities, and he had assumed a form, which was eminently sacred to Ceres. In this form, therefore, the goddess receives him into her bosom. In order to accomplish this design, she transforms herself into a hen, which was deemed a sacred animal by the Britons, in the days of Cæsar.*

* Ind. Antiq. V. II. p. 348.

The singular representation of Ceridwen, as swallowing the aspirant; and of the latter, as continuing for a considerable time imprisoned in her womb, must imply something more than his mere introduction into the sanctuary. This aspirant was intended for the priesthood: and we have here the history of his inclosure, in some ship, cell, or cave, which more immediately symbolized the person of the mystical goddess. In this inclosure, he was subjected to a rigid course of discipline. Here he studied the fanatical rites, and imbibed the sacred doctrines of Ceridwen.

This is consonant with the practice of other heathens. Porphyry, in his treatise, De Antro Nympharum, tells us, that Zoroaster consecrated a natural cell, adorned with flowers, and watered with fountains, in honour of Mithra, the father of the universe: and that the Persians, intending mystically, to represent the descent of the soul into an inferior nature, and its subsequent ascent, into the intellectual world, initiated the priest,—in caverns, or places so fabricated as to resemble them.†

I shall return to this subject in a future section, when I inquire into the nature of some of the monuments of Druidism. But I must now remark, that as the completion of the initiatory rites was deemed by the Gentiles a regeneration, or new birth, and distinguished by that name; so our aspirant is represented as having been born again, of the mystical Ceridwen.

* Vide De Bello Gallico, L. V. C. 12.

† See Ind. Antiq. V. II. p. 242.

As yet, however, we seem to have been only contemplating the lesser mysteries—the greater are still to succeed.

After the aspirant had completed his course of discipline in the cell, had gone through the ceremonies of the lesser mysteries, and had been born again of Ceredwen ; we are told; that this goddess inclosed him in a small boat, covered with skin, and cast him into the sea.

This will be best explained by the Greek solemnities.

The first day of the greater mysteries of Ceres, was called Agyrme, the convocation, being destined to the reception, ablution, and purification of the candidates.

The second day had the name of Ἀλαδὲ Μυσταί, “ Noviciates to the sea:” this being the form by which the herald summoned those who had passed through the lesser mysteries, to the sea shore, for the purpose, as some have supposed, of completing their purification; but the ceremony seems to have had a further meaning, and it is probable, that on this day, the noviciates embarked upon the sea in certain vessels, commemorative of the real history of Ceres, as genius of the floating ark: for, in these mysteries, the whole truth was to be revealed. Accordingly we are told, that Phocion, the Athenian general, taking advantage of this day’s solemnity, put to sea, and engaged the enemy in a naval combat.* But let us observe the progress of the British ceremony.

* Plut. in Vita Phor.

HANES TALIESIN.—CHAP. IV.

“ In those times, Gwyddno’s wear stood out in the beach, “ between Dyvi and Aberystwyth, near his own castle.
“ And in that wear, it was usual to take fish, to the value
“ of a hundred pounds, every year, upon the eve of the “ first of May.

“ Gwyddno had an only son, named Elphin, who had “ been a most unfortunate and necessitous young man.
“ This was a great affliction to his father, who began to “ think that he had been born in an evil hour.

“ His counsellors, however, persuaded the father to let “ this son have the drawing of the wear on that year, by “ way of experiment; in order to prove whether any good “ fortune would ever attend him, and that he might have “ something to begin the world.

“ The next day, being May-eve, Elphin examined the “ wear, and found nothing: but as he was going away, he “ perceived the coracle, covered with a skin, resting upon
“ the pole of the dam.

“ Then one of the wearmen said to him, Thou hast never “ been completely unfortunate before this night; for now “ thou hast destroyed the virtue of the wear, in which the “ value of a hundred pounds was always taken upon the “ eve of May-day.

“ How so? replied Elphin—that coracle may possibly “ contain the value of a hundred pounds.

“ The skin was opened, and the opener perceiving the forehead of an infant, said to Elphin—Behold Taliesin, “ radiant front!

“ Radiant front be his name, replied the prince, who now lifted the infant in his arms, commiserating his own misfortune, and placed him behind him upon his own horse, as if it had been in the most easy chair.

“ Immediately after this, the babe composed for Elphin a song of consolation and praise; at the same time, he prophesied of his future renown. The consolation was the first hymn which Taliesin sung, in order to comfort Elphin, who was grieved for his disappointment in the draught of the wear; and still more so, at the thought that the world would impute the fault and misfortune wholly to himself.”

Elphin carries the new-born babe to the castle, and presents him to his father, who demands whether he was a human being or a spirit; and is answered in a mystical song, in which he professes himself a general primary Bard, who had existed in all ages, and identifies his own character with that of the sun.

Gwyddno, astonished at his proficiency, demands another song, and is answered as follows:

Ar y dwr mae cyflwr, &c.*

* W. Archaiol. p. 76.

“ Water has the property of conferring a blessing. It is meet to think rightly of God. It is meet to pray earnestly to God; because the benefits which proceed from him, cannot be impeded.

“ Thrice have I been born. I know how to meditate. It is woeful that men will not come to seek all the sciences of the world, which are treasured in my bosom; for I know all that has been, and all that will be hereafter,” &c.

Let us now make a few observations upon our mythologist's account of those mystic rites, to their final completion.

I have already taken notice that Taliesin, radiant front, was properly a title of the sun, and thence transferred to his priest. This priest had now, for a complete year, attended the preparation of the mystical cauldron: he had received the water of inspiration, and with it the sacred lessons of Ceridwen: he had been received and swallowed up by that goddess, and had remained for some time in her womb, or had been subjected to a course of discipline in the mystical cell, and at length he had been born again.

But after this, we find him inclosed in a coracle, or small boat, cast into the sea, and consigned into the hands of Gwyddno Garanhir, and his son Elphin.

The very process here described, evidently relates to a connected series of mystical rites, allusive to one history: and the character and connexions of Ceridwen, the great agent, compared with the import of the mysteries of Ceres, as elucidated by Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber, abundantly prove, that the reference must be made to the history of the deluge.

According to this tale, therefore, the Britons celebrated the commemoration of the deliverance out of the ark upon the eve of May-day. And if they supposed the deluge to have continued for a year and a day, the period which was employed in preparing the mystical cauldron, the anniversary of its commencement would fall, of course, upon the twenty-ninth of April.

As Ceridwen threw the coracle into the sea upon that day, so opportune for the drawing of Gwddno's wear on the morrow, it may be inferred, that Gwyddno and his son were intimately connected with the family of Ceridwen. Taking all circumstances into account, we may even presume, that they were the same as her husband Tegid, and her unfortunate son Avagddu.

Tegid, indeed, is said to have had two sons, whereas Gwyddno is described as having but one at this time: but it may be replied, that Morvran, the raven of the sea, had deserted his family, previous to the debarkation from the ark.

The idea here suggested respecting Gwyddno, differs from the received opinion of the Welsh, which Mr. Owen thus details in his Cambrian Biography.

“ Gwyddno Garanhir, or Dewrarth Wledig, was a Prince “ of Cantrev y Gwaelod, and also a poet, some of whose “ composition is in the Welsh Archaology. He flourished

“from about A. D. 460, to 520. The whole of his territory was inundated by the sea in his life-time, and it forms the present Cardigan Bay.”

The whole of this account, though literally understood in the country, appears to me nothing more than a piece of local mythology, of the same kind as those tales, which assert the submersion of cities in the lakes of Wales. But let us hear the record of the catastrophe, as preserved in the Triads.

“Seithinin the Drunkard, the son of Seithin Saidi, King of Dyved, in his liquor let in the sea, over Cantre'r Gwaelod, so as to destroy all the houses and lands of the place, where, prior to that event, there had been sixteen cities, the best of all the towns and cities of Wales, excepting Caerleon upon Usk. This district was the dominion of Gwyddnaw Garanhir, King of Caredigiawn. The event happened in the time of Emrys, the sovereign. The men who escaped the inundation, came to land in Ardudwy, in the regions of Arvon, and in the mountains of Snowdon, and other places which had hitherto been uninhabited.”*

This is, undoubtedly, the substance of an old Mabinogi, or mythological tale, and ought not to be received as authentic history. For, in the first place, Cardigan Bay did exist in the time of Ptolemy, who marks the promontories by which it is circumscribed, and the mouths of the rivers which it receives, in nearly the same relative situations which they retain at present. But neither Ptolemy, nor any other ancient geographer, takes notice of one of those sixteen cities, which are said to have been lost there in the sixth century.

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 64.

In the next place, we know enough of the geography of Wales, both ancient and modern, to form a decisive conclusion, that a single Cantrev, or hundred, never did contain sixteen towns, which would bear the slightest comparison with Caerleon, such as it was in the supposed age of Gwyddno.

Again: the incident is generally represented as having happened, in consequence of having neglected to close a sluice; a cause inadequate, surely, to the alleged effect. And the omission is imputed to a son of Seithin Saidi, King of Dyved, a character whom we have already traced into the regions of mythology. We have marked his intimate connexion with the history of the deluge, and the mystic rites by which it was commemorated, and have ascertained his identity with Tegid, the husband of Ceridwen.

The landing of those who escaped from this drowned country, upon the mountains of Snowdon, is like the landing of Deucalion upon Mount Parnassus. It is not history, but mythology. The district of Snowdon, from the remotest period of British mythology, was famous for its Arkite memorials. Here was the city of Emrys, or the ambrosial city—this was also called the city of Phariön, or the higher powers; that is, the Baalim, or Arkite patriarchs. Here the dragons were concealed in the time of *Beli (the solar deity), and in the time of Prydain, the son of Aedd the Great,* a mystical personage of the same family. As dragons were harnessed in the car of the British Ked, as well as in that of Ceres, the concealing of these animals, in a city of the higher powers, must imply an establishment of her mysteries.

R 2

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 59.

The land of Gwyddno is said to have been inundated in the time of Emrys, the sovereign. This is the personage from whom the temple of Stonehenge, as well as the sacred city in Snowden, derived its name. If the Britons of the fifth century had a monarch who bore this title, we can only say, that like his successors Uthyr and Arthur, he was complimented with a name out of the vocabulary of the Druids; and that the age of Emrys was any age, which acknowledged the Helio-arkite superstition.

Let us then return to the dominions of Gwyddnaw. We are told that his castle stood near the shore, between Dyvi and Aberystwyth: and that his wear, in which a valuable capture was annually made, upon the eve of May-day, was near that castle, in the opposite beach. This gives the same topography of the coast which we find at present; and the stated period of the capture points to some mystical meaning. It connects the tale of Gwyddnaw with that of Ceridwen, who chose the time and place, in the exposure of the coracle, so conveniently for its recovery in the mystical wear, upon the sacred eve. Hence we may expect to find, that Gwyddnaw was the same character as Seithinin, or Serthin, who introduced the sea over the land, and consequently the same as Tegid; or a representative of the great patriarch.

* W. Archæiol. V. II. p. 55.

His name seems to imply priest of the ship, from Gwydd, presence, attendance, and Naw, an old term for a ship, which is retained by Taliesin and Meugant.*

This prince had the surname or title of Garanhir, which literally means, the long or high crane. As to the propriety of this title, it has been already seen, that the tauriform god, of the continental Celtæ, was styled Tri-garanos, from the circumstance of his carrying three cranes; and I may add, that Mr. Bryant has remarked the same symbolical bird, in the Helio-arkite superstition of other nations. The Egyptian crane, Abis or Ibis, he tells us, for its great services to mankind, was held in high honour, being sacred to the god of light. He adds that Geranos, the Greek name of this bird, was a title of the sun himself, and that the priest of Cybele, the same character as our Ceridwen, was styled Carnas, which was a title of the deity whom he served, and of the same purport as the former.†

The names Gwyddnaw and Garanhir appear, therefore, to have had a marked reference to Arkite superstition, and to the character of Ceres, or Cybele.

But, as the mythological personages of the Britons,

* Mal ymsawdd yn llyn heb Naw
W. Archaiol. p. 27.
Myned e Fenai cyn ni'm bu Naw
Ibid. p. 159.

† See Analysis, V. I. p. 47.

If we advert to the natural history of the crane, he is an aquatic bird, and a great fisher; so Gwyddnaw was a Diluvian priest, and a fisher of men.

though few in reality, are honoured with a multiplicity of titles, importing the various functions which they filled, or alluding to the several circumstances of their history; so the same Gwyddnaw is distinguished by the name of Dewrarth Wledig. The first of these terms implies the mighty bear, and is nearly synonymous with Arthur, the mythological representative of the patriarch: whilst Wledig is a title of such eminent dignity, that it is only applied to sovereigns of the highest order.

Elphin, the son of this personage, is represented as having been a most forlorn and unfortunate character, previous to the opening of the coracle, or mystical ark; but afterwards he became illustrious. As the preparation of the cauldron, was designed for the benefit of Avagddu, and the drawing of the wear, for that of Elphin, and as these mystical rites had a mutual connexion and dependence, I think it highly probable, that under these two names, we have a description of the same personage.

The mystical poems represent Maelgwn, as having confined Elphin in a strong stone tower. This may be mere mythology, or it may imply, that the Venedotian king of that name, prohibited some of the heathenish rites of the Britons.

Be this as it may, we find that Taliesin, the great president of the Bards, devotes himself intirely to the interest of Elphin, styles him his sovereign, and drops many hints, which evidently place him in the connexion of the British Ceres. Thus—" I came to Teganwy, to maintain the con" test with Maelgwn, the greatest of delinquents: in the “ presence of the Distributor, I liberated my lord, even “ Elphin, the sovereign of those who carry ears of corn.”*

The chief of the Bards seldom assumes the character of a prophet, without adverting to this great achievement of liberating Elphin; it was his most brilliant enterprize, in which he was assisted, even by a train of radiant Seraphim. In short, he always speaks of this act, with as much self-importance, as if he were delivering an oracle, or interpreting the will of a present god.

Taliesin himself was honoured with a title of the sun: he presided in Caer Sidi, which, as I shall shew hereafter, was a type of the Zodiac, and he claimed the viceroyalty of the British island, by the investiture of the Helio-arkite god, the acknowledged emperor of the earth and seas. We may therefore be sure, that when he speaks of Elphin, not only as his lord, but as the sovereign of all the disciples of Druidism, he regarded him, as in some sense, identified with that splendid divinity. The same thing may be inferred from another title of Elphin, namely, Rhuvawn Beryr, he who radiantly shines forth.

The son of Gwyddnaw, distinguished by this appellation, is styled Gwyndeyrn, the blessed or illustrious sovereign.† He is also called Eurgelain, the golden body, and ranked with Madawc mab Brwyn, the benificent son of Sprigs, and Ceugant Beilliawg, searcher of certain truth; two ideal personages who seem to have presided over the art of divination, or oracular mystery. And we are told, that Elphin had

* Appendix, No. 1.

† W. Archiol, V. II. p. 3 and 62.

this name, because he was redeemed, at his weight in gold, when he had fallen into the hand of the enemy.*

Hywel, the son of Owen, prince of North Wales, says of this personage—

Ton wen orewyn orwlych bedd,
Gwyddfa Ruvawn Bevyr, Ben Teyrnedd †

“ The white wave, with its foamy edge, sprinkles the “ grave; even the mount of the presence of Rhuvawn
“ Bevyr, the chief of sovereigns.”

These and similar titles, which the Triads and mystical Bards confer upon Gwyddnaw and his son, are surely inapplicable to the lords of a single Cantred, which was now lying in the bottom of Cardigan bay. Their story has been misunderstood; and the titles which primarily belonged to the Helio-arkite patriarch, were transferred to those priests who supplied his place, in certain departments of the mystic rites; and particularly, in the finishing scene, where the truth was to be revealed.

Here the noviciate was committed to the sea, which represented the deluge, in a close coracle, the symbol of the ark; and after the example of the just patriarch, was to be saved from this image of the flood, at Gwyddnaw's wear, the type of the mount of debarkation.

This wear, I conjecture, from its marked topography,

* W. Archæol. V. II. p. 15 and 69.

† Ibid. p. 277.

was no other than the natural causeway, or reef of rocks, in Cardigan bay, which the Welsh call Sarn Badrig.

With these ideas, the poems ascribed to Gwyddnaw, exactly correspond. They seem to be nothing more than old songs, designed to be chaunted at these mystical representations; but their style and orthography are so very uncouth, that it is difficult to ascertain the meaning of some passages.

One of them is said to have been sung at the time, when the sea covered the land of Gwyddnaw. It contains an imprecation upon some damsel who poured the sea over the land.

This Nereid or Fury, is described as—

Fynnawn wenestyr inor terwyn—

“The attendant on the fountain of the raging sea.” The calamity, as usual, is ascribed to the prevalence of pride and excess. The water covers the plains. They call, in their extreme distress, upon God, who had provided the chair of Kedawl, the Beneficent, which is a title of the Arkite goddess, as a place of refuge. Here Gwyddnaw, the priest of the ship, confines himself in his chamber, and is preserved from the calamity.

The subject of another of these poems is a contention, between Gwyddnaw and Gwyn ab Nudd, the Demon who presided over Annwn, the deep, or abyss.

I shall attempt the translation of another little poem, ascribed to Gwyddnaw, as it throws considerable light upon his character and office. It is evidently a formula in the celebration of the mystical rites. It pertains to the ceremony of inclosing the aspirant in the coracle, and launching him into the water, as described in Hanes Taliesin, and the reputed author supports the dignity of Hierophant.

The Probationer, seeing the wear, or Sarn Badrig, at a prodigious distance, and trembling at the thought of the perilous adventure, exclaims,

“ Though I love the sea beach, I dread the open sea: a
“ billow may come, undulating over the stone.”

To this, the solemn Hierophant replies—

“ To the brave, to the magnanimous, to the amiable, to “ the generous, who boldly embarks, the ascending stone of “ the Bards will prove the harbour of life! It has asserted the “ praise of HEILYN, the mysterious impeller of the sky;
“ and, till the doom shall its symbol be continued.”

PROBATIONER.

“ Though I love the strand, I dread the wave: great has “ been its violence—dismal the overwhelming stroke. Even
“ to him who survives, it will be the subject of lamen“ tation.”

GWYDDNAW.

“ It is a pleasant act, to wash on the bosom of the “ fair water. Though it fill the receptacle, it will not “ disturb the heart. My associated train regard not its “ overwhelming.

“ As for him who repented of his enterprize, the lofty “ (wave) has hurried the babler far away to his death;

 “ but the brave, the magnanimous will find his compensa“ tion, in arriving safe at the stones. The conduct of the “ water will declare thy merit.”

(The Hierophant then addresses the timid, or rejected candidate.)

“ Thy coming without external purity, is a pledge that “ I will not receive thee.—Take out the gloomy one!—
 “ From my territory have I alienated the rueful steed—my “ revenge, upon the shoal of earth-worms, is their hopeless
 “ longing, for the pleasant allotment. Out of the recep“ tacle which is thy aversion, did I obtain the RAIN-“ BOW.”*

This little piece throws more light upon the character and office of Gwyddnaw, than half a volume of hypothetical reasoning could have done.

He performs that very ceremony, which Hanes Taliesin ascribes to Ceridwen, the Arkite goddess, upon the instigation of her husband. He was then, that husband; or he was a priest, who personally represented the deified patriarch: and upon certain stated days, exhibited an emblem of the deluge, by turning his noviciates a drift in Cardigan bay, at the mouth of the Ystwyth, Styctuis, or Styx, of the Druids, and in covered coracles, which were manifest symbols of the ark. The worthy candidate was encouraged to adventure in this hardy probation, with the prospect of being fished up again at the landing place of the Bards, when the tide, or pretended deluge had subsided.

* W. Archaiol. p. 165.

Gwyddnaw and his assistants, ought to have been well acquainted with the setting of the currents, though it be fairly admitted, that occasionally, they made a sacrifice to the deep.

The doctrine inculcated by this perilous ceremony, is sufficiently obvious. The same superintending providence, which had protected the magnanimous and amiable patriarch, from the waters of the deluge, would likewise distinguish his worthy descendants; and by conducting them in safety to the sacred landing place, ascertain their due admission to the privileges of the Bardic religion. At the same time, the very form and condition of this ceremony must have deterred the pusilanimous candidate, as well as him that was conscious of secret crimes.

Fortunately, this was the last hazardous scene in the initiatory rites of the Druids. For we find, that as soon as Elphin had extricated the aspirant from his coracle, he received him in his arms, gently lifted him upon his steed, or into his ship, for such were the mythological steeds of the Britons; conducted him to his father, and acknowledged him a complete Bard of the highest order.

The old Bards speak in magnificent terms, of the benefits which were derived from these mysterious rites. They were viewed as most important, to the happiness of human life. They imparted sacred science in its greatest purity and perfection; and he who had completed his probation, was called Dedwydd, one who has recovered intelligence, or rather, has been brought back into the presence. It is nearly equivalent to the Greek term, Εποπτης, which describes a person who had been initiated into the greater mysteries.

I have now considered the whole of that singular story, called Hanes Taliesin: I have shewn, that it relates to a succession of ceremonies, by which the ancient Britons commemorated the history of the deluge; and that these ceremonies had a constant analogy with the mystical rites of Ceres and Isis, which our best mythologists regard as memorials of the same event.

The narrator seems to have abridged his tale from a larger history, or tradition, to which he refers; and, perhaps, he has added a few touches of his own. But the main incidents are derived from the genuine superstition of the Britons, as appears by several passages of the mystical poems.

Thus, in the piece which immediately follows the tale in the Welsh Archaiology, Taliesin gives this account of himself.

Kyntaf i'm lluniwyd, ar lun dyn glwys,
 Yn llys Ceridwen a'm penydiwys.
 Cyd bum bach o'm gwled, gwyl fy nghynnwys;
 Oeddwn fawr, uwch llawr, llan a'm tywys.
 Pryd fum parwyden, per Awen parwys;
 Ag ynghyfraith, heb iaith, a'm ryddryllwys
 Hen Widdon ddulon, pan lidiwys:
 Anghŷriawl ei hawl, pan hwyliwys.

“ I was first modelled into the form of a pure man, in “ the hall of Ceridwen, who subjected me to penance.
 “ Though small within my chest, and modest in my de“ portment, I was great. A sanctuary carried me above the “ surface of the earth.

“ Whilst I was inclosed within its ribs, the sweet AWEN
 “ rendered me complete: and my law, without audible lan“ guage, was imparted to me by the old giantess, darkly “ smiling in her wrath; but her claim was not regretted when “ she set sail.”

The Bard then enumerates the various forms which he had assumed, in order to elude the grasp of Ceridwen. These changes do not seem to relate to the Druidical doctrine of transmigration; they rather express the several characters, under which the aspirant was viewed in the successive stages of initiation.

The piece concludes thus.

Fföes yn ronyn gwyn, gwenith lwys,
 Ar ael llen carthen i'm carfaglwys.
 Cymmaint oedd ei gweled, a chyfeb Rewys,
 A fai yn llenwi, fal llong ar ddyfrwys:
 Mewn boly tywyll i'm tywalltwys:
 Mewn mor Dylan, i'm dychwelwys:
 Bu goelfain i'm, pan i'm cain fygwys;
 Duw Arglwydd, yn rhydd, a'm rhyddhawys.

“ I fled in the form of a fair grain of pure wheat: upon
 “ the edge of a covering cloth, she caught me in her “ fangs. In appearance, she was as large as a proud mare, “ which she also resembled—then was she swelling out, like
 “ a ship upon the water Into a dark receptacle she cast
 “ me. She carried me back into the sea of DYLAN. It
 “ was an auspicious omen to me, when she happily suffo“ cated me. God the Lord freely set me at large.”

In these remarkable lines, the Bard treats of a course of penance, discipline, and mystical instruction, which had contributed to purify, complete, and exalt his character, and to liberate him from the ills of mortality.

These mystical lessons must have consisted in scenical or symbolical representation; for his law was imparted to him, without the intervention of language.

And they commenced in the hall of Ceridwen, who is represented as an old giantess, as a hen, as a mare, and as a ship, which set sail, lifted the Bard from the earth, and swelled out like a ship upon the waters. It was also a sacred ship, for it is called Llan, a sanctuary, or temple; and it was the Diluvian ark, for it inclosed the noviciate, and carried him back into the sea of Dylan, or Noah. Ceridwen was, therefore, what Mr. Bryant pronounces Ceres to have been, the genius of the ark; and her mystic rites represented the memorials of the deluge.

From the language of the Bard, it should seem that this goddess was represented by a series of emblems, each of which was regarded as her image: or else, that she was depicted under one compound symbolical figure, in the same manner as Diana or Hecate, the lunar ark, which is described by the author of the Orphic Argonautics, as having the heads of a dog, a horse, and a lion.*

And that the ancient Britons actually did pourtray this character in the grotesque manner suggested by our Bard, appears by several ancient British coins, where we find a figure, compounded of a bird, a boat, and a mare.

S

* Faber's Myst. of the Cabiri, V. I. p. 280.

It may be thought a whimsical conceit in our British Bard, to describe his Arkite goddess under the character of a mare. But Taliesin is still classical. Mr. Bryant takes notice, that Ceres was not only styled Hippa, the mare, but that she was represented as having been changed into the form of that animal.*

The same learned author refers to the patriarch Noah, the character of Dionusus,† who was supposed to have been twice born, and thence was styled Διφύνης. Sometimes the intermediate state is taken into account, and he is represented as having experienced three different lives. Here the authority of the Orphic hymns is quoted, in which this deity has the titles of Τριφύνης, of three natures, and Τριγενος, thrice born. Just so, we have heard Taliesin, in the poem before us, declare—Teirgwaith a'm ganed—Thrice was I born. The last birth of Dionusus, adds Mr. Bryant, was from Hippa, the mare, certainly the ark, at which time nature herself was renewed.§

That the representations which we have in this poem of Taliesin, are authentically derived from the mythology of the heathen Britons, will not admit of a reasonable doubt. What Bard of the sixth century, unless he were conducted by such a genuine clue, could have traced the connexion between the character of Ceres, under the strange symbol of a mare, and the vessel of the Diluvian patriarch? What scholar, in modern and enlightened times, could have developed the system which our Bard supports, before the

* Analysis, V. II. p. 27, &c.

† Ibid. p. 77 and 274.

§ Ibid. p. 410.

Borlase's Antiq. p. 259.

Gibson's Camden, Tab. I.

Whitaker's Manchester 4th Vol. I. p. 55. of the Correction of Book 1st genius and erudition of Mr. Bryant demonstrated, that Ceres or Isis was in reality a female character, supposed to preside over the ark, and that the mare was a symbol of this goddess?
D^o 8th Edition Vol. I. p. 342.

The same connexion between the history of the deluge, and the character of Ceridwen, represented as a hen, appears in other ancient poems, so as to authenticate the incidents of Hanes Taliesin. Thus the president of the Bards, having enumerated several of his mystical transmigrations, proceeds in this strain.—

“ I have been a grain of the Arkites, which vegetated “ upon a hill: and then the reaper placed me in a smoky “ recess, that I might be compelled freely to yield my corn,
 “ when subjected to tribulation. I was received by the hen
 “ with red fangs, and a divided crest. I remained nine “ nights, an infant in her womb. I have been Aedd, re“ turning to my former state—I have died, I have re“ vived—Again was I instructed by the cherisher (hen),
 “ with red fangs. Of what she gave me, scarcely can I “ express the great praise that is due. I am now Taliesin.
 “ I will compose a just string, which shall remain to the end
 “ of time, as a chief model of Elphin.”*

The reaper, mentioned in this passage, is Tegid, Gwydd-naw, or Seithwedd Saidi, a character referable to Noah, the great husbandman, and the same at Saturn, who is furnished with a sickle, or scythe.

The period of the aspirant's imprisonment in the womb of Ceridwen, is variously represented. Here, it is limited to nine nights; but elsewhere, we are told, it was nine months.

Mi a fum naw mîs hayach,
Ym mol Geridwen Wrach:
Mi a fum gynt Wion bach;
Talesin ydwy bellach.*

“ I have been, for the space of nine months, in the belly
“ of Ceridwen the Fury: I was formerly Gwion the Little;
“ henceforth I am Talesin.”

Amongst the ancient poems relative to this mystical personage, I must distinguish one, which is entitled Cadair Ceridwen; † in which she is brought forward to speak for herself: or rather, her minister and representative speaks in her name, and touches upon some curious topics of her history. The piece begins thus. ‡

Rhëen rym awyr! tithau
Cereifant o'm correddeu:
Yn newaint, ym mhlygeineu,
Llewychawd yn lleufereu.
Mynawg hoedl, Minawg ap Lleu,
A welais i yma gynneu;

* W. Archaiol. p. 19.

† The chair of Ceridwen.

‡ W. Archaiol. p. 66.

Diwedd yn llechwedd Lleu :
Bu gwrdd ei hwrdd ynghadeu.

“ Sovereign of the power of the air! even thou puttest an end to my wanderings. In the dead of night, and at the dawns, have our lights been shining. Decreed is the continuance of life to Minawc, the son of Lleu, whom I saw here awhile ago, and for the last time, upon the slope of the hill of Lleu: dreadfully has he been assaulted in the conflicts.”

The sovereign of the power of the air seems to be the same character as Heilyn, the most mysterious impeller of the sky, mentioned in the poem of Gwyddnaw. By this title, it might be thought that the Bards meant to describe the Supreme Being, who put an end to the calamity of the deluge: but I observe, that in the poem, called the Chair of Teyrn On,* Apollo, or the solar divinity, is styled, Heilyn Pasgadwr—Heilyn the Feeder.

As the ark had wandered upon the surface of the waters, so Ceres, the genius of the ark, is represented as having lighted torches, and wandered over the whole earth in search of her daughter, who had been carried away by the king of the deep. To these torches, or to those which were carried in the celebration of the nocturnal mysteries, and in commemoration of the state of darkness, in which the patriarch and his family had been involved,† we have a manifest allusion in the verses before us.

Minawc, the son of Lleu, to whom a continuance of life

* Appendix, No. 4.

† Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 331.

had been decreed, and who had taken his departure from the ARK, upon the slope of the hill, was clearly a representative of the patriarch Noah. And his British title seems to have had more than an accidental similarity to one which was conferred upon him by other heathens.

Mr. Bryant tells us, that Meen, Menes, Menon, and the like, were titles by which the Deus Lunus, that is Noah, was distinguished in different countries: * that the votaries of the patriarch, who was called Meen and Menes, were styled Minyæ; which name was given them, from the object of their worship; † that the Menæi, in Sicily, were situated upon the river Menais; that they had traditions of a deluge, and a notion that Deucalion was saved upon Mount Ætna, near which was the city Noa; that there were of old Minyæ in Elis, upon the river Minyas; and that the chief title of the Argonauts was that of Minyæ. ‡

It is a remarkable coincidence, that the same patriarch was worshipped by the name of Minauc, in the island Mona, and upon the river Menai.

It may also deserve notice, that the sentimental picture exhibited in this British passage, has a striking coincidence with the concluding ceremonies in the nocturnal mysteries of the just person, and those of the Arkite Athene, mentioned in the Orphic Argonautics, and thus described by Mr. Bryant. §

“ By Ἀρεῖων Ἀδηνῶν was meant Arkite providence; in other

* Analys. V. II. p. 309.

† Ibid. p. 242.

‡ Ibid. p. 510.

“ words, divine wisdom, by which the world was preserved.
 “ In these mysteries, after the people had for a long time
 “ bewailed the loss of a particular person, he was at length
 “ supposed to be restored to life. Upon this, the priest “ used to address the people in these memorable terms.
 “ Comfort yourselves, all ye who have been partakers of the “ mysteries of the Deity, thus preserved: for we shall now
 “ enjoy some respite from our labours.” To these were added
 “ the following remarkable words—I have escaped a great “ calamity, and my lot is greatly mended”*

Ceridwen thus proceeds.

Afa^gddu, fy mab inneu,
 Dedwydd Dofydd rhwy goren :
 Ynghyf amryson kerddeu,
 Oedd gwell ei synwyr no'r fau:
 Celfyddaf gwr a gogleu.
 Gwydion ap Don, dygnfertheu,
 A hudwys gwraig o flodeu :
 A dyddwg moch o ddeheu
 (Can ni bu iddaw disgoreu)
 Drud ymyd, a gwryd pletheu :
 A rhithwys gorwyddawd, y ar plagawd lys,
 Ac enwerys cyfrwyeu.

“ As to Avagddu, my own son, the correcting god formed
 “ him anew for happiness. In the contention of mysteries,
 “ his wisdom has exceeded mine. The most accomplished
 “ of beings is he.

“ Gwydion, the son of Don, by his exquisite art, charmed

* Analysis, V. II. p. 332.

‘ forth a woman composed of flowers; and early did he “ conduct to the right side (as he wanted a protecting “ rampart) the bold curves, and the virtue of the various “ folds: and he formed a steed upon the springing plants,
 “ with illustrious trappings.”

Ceridwen, having spoken of the conclusion of her wanderings, and the continuance of life, which was decreed to Minauc, adverts to the history of Avagddu, utter darkness, or black accumulation, her late unfortunate son. He was now become Dedwydd, or Ερωεττης, and formed for happiness. This felicity he seems to have attained by means of the lady, whom Gwydion composed of flowers, adorned with the bold curves and various folds, and graced with a stately steed. This personage could have been no other than the Genius of the Rainbow, whom we shall presently find introduced by her proper name, and whose province it was to constitute a protecting fence.

Gwydion, the son of Don, is a great agent in these mystical poems. In another piece of Taliesin’s,* we find him counselling Hu, or Aeddon, the patriarch, to impress the front of his shield with an irresistible form, by means of which, both he and his chosen rank, triumphed over the demon of the waters.

This Gwydion ab Don, was the same character as Mercury the son of Jove, or Hermes, the counsellor of Cronus or Saturn, mentioned in the fragment of Sanchoniathon.

* Appendix, No. 10.

Ceridwen, in the next place, touches upon her own endowments and privileges.—

Pan farmer y cadeiriau,
 Arbennig uddun y fau :
 Fynghadair, a'm pair, a'm deddfon,
 A'm araith drwyadl, gadair gysson.
 Rym gelwir gyfrwys, yn llys Don—
 Mi, ag Euronwy ag Euron.

“ When the merit of the presidencies shall be adjudged, mine will be found the superior amongst them—my chair, my cauldron, and my laws, and my pervading eloquence, meet for the presidency. I am accounted skilful in the court of Don (Jove) and with me, Euronwy and Euron.”

The cauldron of Ceridwen has already engaged our notice. Her chair or presidency, must imply her sanctuary, together with its due establishment, and all the rites and laws pertaining to it. She here speaks of those laws, and Taliesin has told us, in a passage which I have produced, that without audible language, she had imparted to him the laws by which he was to be governed.

It must be recollected, that Ceres and Isis were esteemed, and styled lawgivers.

The poem concludes thus—

Gweleis ymladd taer, yn Nant Ffrancon,
 Duw Sul, pryd plygeint,
 Rhwng Wythaint a Gwydion.
 Dyfieu, yn geugant, ydd aethant Fon,

I geissaw yscut, a hudolion.
 Arianrhod, drem clod, a gwawr hinon,
 Mwyaf gwarth y marth, o barth Brython,
 Dybrys am ei lys, Enfys Avon :
 Afon a'i hechrys guryys, gwrth terra.
 Gwenwyn ei chynbyd, cylch byd, eda.
 Nid wy dywaid geu llyfreu Breda :
 Cadair Gedwidedd yssydd yma ;
 A, hyd frawd, parawd yn Europa.

“ I saw a fierce conflict in the vale of Beaver, on the day
 “ of the Sun, at the hour of dawn, between the birds of “ Wrath and Gwydion. On the day of Jove, they (the “ birds of Wrath) securely went to Mona, to demand a “ sudden shower of the sorcerers : but the goddess of the sil- “ ver wheel, of auspicious mien, the dawn of serenity, the “ greatest restrainer of sadness, in behalf of the Britons, “ speedily throws round his hall, the stream of the Rainbow,
 “ a stream which scares away violence from the earth, and “ causes the bane of its former state, round the circle of the “ world to subside. The books of the Ruler of the Mount, “ record no falshood. The *Chair of the Preserver remains
 “ here ; and till the doom, shall it continue in Europe.”

I would recommend the whole of this passage to the attention of the learned, as a subject of importance in British

* The original word may be a compound of Kéd, the Arkite goddess, and Gwid, a whirl, or revolution. Thus Cynddelu says of himself, and his Bardic fraternity—

Gwyr a'n cydberchid uch gwîd gwenen.

“ We are men who have been mutually honoured over the whirl of the “ white stream.”—Alluding to their initiation into Arkite mysteries.

See Owen's Dict. V. Gwid.

antiquities. It furnishes a proof, beyond doubt or contradiction, of the establishment of Arkite memorials in this island, and sets forth to view some singular traits of British tradition, upon the subject of the deluge.

In the first place, Ceridwen, the Ark, witnesses a fierce conflict in the vale of the Beaver. That animal, under the name of Avanc, is constantly introduced into the British account of the deluge; and the drawing of him out of the lake, as we have already seen, is represented as a great act, which was conducive to the removing of that calamity. Our ancestors seem to have regarded the Beaver as an emblem of the patriarch himself. To this symbolical honour, this creature may have been promoted, by a peculiarity in his natural history. The patriarch had built himself a vessel or house, in which he had lived in the midst of the waters; and which had deposited that venerable personage and his family, safe upon dry ground. So the Beaver is not only an amphibious animal, but also a distinguished architect. He is said to build a house of two stories, one of which is in the water, and the other above the water; and out of the latter, he has an egress to dry ground. The fanciful genius of heathenism could not have demanded or discovered a more happy coincidence, with the history of the Diluvian patriarch.

The conflict here mentioned, was between Gwydion, the great agent in the preservation of mankind, and the Gwythaint, some feigned, winged creatures, which derive their name from Gwyth, Wrath, or Fury. These may be considered as the ministers of wrath, or the demons of destruction, let loose at the deluge. When foiled by Gwydion or Hermes, they are represented as hastening to Mona, to procure assistance of certain sorcerers. These were, undoubtedly the same, which are introduced in Taliesin's elegy, upon the priest of Mona,* by the names of Math and Eunydd, and described, as introducing the confusion of nature, at the deluge.

Math ag Eunydd, hudwydd gelfydd
Rydd elfinor.

“ Math and Eunydd, masters of the magic wand, let “ loose the elements.”

From these agents of desolation, the birds of wrath now demand a sudden shower, evidently for the purpose of producing a second deluge, that they might triumph over Gwydion.

This new calamity was prevented by Arianrod, the goddess of the silver wheel, whom Gwydion produced from a combination of flowers. This lady, who was the dawn of serenity, poured fourth the stream of the rainbow; a stream, which not only scared away violence from the earth, but also removed the bane, or poison of the deluge, to which the mystical bards have frequent allusions.

This representation is clearly derived from the history of Noah, and of the bow in the cloud, that sacred token of the covenant which God made with man, and of the promise, that the waters should no more become a flood to destroy all flesh. But the incidents which this poem blends with the truth of sacred history, furnish a convincing proof, that the Bardic account was derived through the channel of heathenism.

* Appendix, No. 10.

In the conclusion, we are told, that the Chair or presidency of the Preserver, namely, Ceridwen, was established here, and so firmly, that it is confidently added, it should continue to the end of time.

This poem was evidently intended to be sung or recited, in the ceremonies of a heathen solemnity, by a priest or priestess, who personated Ceridwen; but some paltry and mendicant minstrel, who only chaunted it as an old song, has tacked on three lines, in a style and measure, totally different from the preceding verses.—

An rbothwy y Drindawd
Trugaredd Dyddbrawd—
Cein gardawd gan wyrda!

“ May the Trinity grant us mercy in the day of judgment!—A liberal donation, good gentlemen!”

The old poem, called the Chair of Taliesin, furnishes a long list of the various apparatus, requisite for the due celebration of the feast of Ceridwen: and particularly, enumerates several of the ingredients of the mystical cauldron.

As the curious might wish to compare this British account, with the hints which ancient authors have thrown out, respecting the superstition of the Druids, and with, what has been recorded of the mystical rites of other countries; I shall insert the whole of this obscure piece, with the best translation, and explanatory notes which I can supply.

We here find the character of the Arkite goddess identified with that of the Moon. Of this circumstance, I have already taken some notice, and have shewn, from Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber, that such confusion of characters was not peculiar to British mythology.

KADEIR TALIESIN.*

Mydwyf merwerydd
 Molawd Duw Dofydd,
 Llwrw cyfranc cewydd
 Cyfreu dyfnwedydd.
 Bardd, bron Sywedydd,
 Ban adleferydd
 Awen Cudd Echwydd
 Ar feinoeth feinydd.

Beirdd llafar lluc de,
 Eu gwawd nym gre
 Ar ystrawd ar ystre:
 Ystryw mawr mire.

Ac mi wyf cerdd fud
 Gogyfarch feirdd tud:

* W. Archaiol. p. 37.

character as distinguished from the mere poet, and even from the Bard of the household, who was an officer of no mean rank, in the British court, as we learn from the laws of Howel. It was his privilege to be entertained at the king's table, to be endowed with free land, to have his wardrobe furnished, and his steed provided at the king's expense; yet, he was to give place to the Cathedral Bard, or priest, of the ancient national order.

Though I must leave several things in this poem unexplained, it may seem proper to take notice of other particulars, and throw what light I can upon them.

Merwerydd, in the first line, comes from Marwor, embers, or hot coals. It seems to have denoted a person who had the charge of keeping up a fire. The term at present, implies that kind of madness or enthusiasm, which we suppose to have possessed the heathen prophets. Dovydd (line 2) is literally, the Tamer, Domitor. Cewydd, in the next line, an associate, from Caw, a band or circumscription. Hence Prydain, Dywnwal, and Brân are styled Ban-Cewyddion Teyrnedd, consolidating sovereigns.* Sywedydd (line 5) a mystagogue, or revealer of mysteries. Ys-yw-wedydd, a declarer of what is. We find Syw, pl. Sywed, and Sywiôn, in the same sense. Cúdd, (line 7) the dark repository—the Ark.

To proceed with our Bard—

Pwy amlenwis cás
 Camp ymhob noethas
 Pan yw Dien gw lith
 A llad gwenith

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 63.

Rydebrwyddaf drud ;
 Rytalmaf ehud ;
 Ryddyhunaf dremud—
 Teyrn terwyu wolud.

Nid mi wyf cerdd fas
 Gogyfarch feirdd tras
 Bath fadawl iddas—
 Dofn eigiawn addas !

“ I am he who animates the fire, to the honour of the “ god Dovydd, in behalf of the assembly of associates, qua“ lified to treat of mysteries—a Bard, with the knowledge
 “ of a Sywedydd, when he deliberately recites the inspired “ song of the Western Cudd, on a serene night amongst “ the stones.

“ As to loquacious, glittering bards, their encomium
 “ attracts me not, when moving in the course: admiration
 “ is their great object.

“ And I am a silent proficient, who address the Bards
 “ of the land: it is mine to animate the hero; to persuade
 “ the unadvised; to awaken the silent beholder—the bold “ illuminator of kings !

“ I am no shallow artist, greeting the Bards of a house“ hold, like a subtle parasite——THE OCEAN HAS A DUE “ PROFUNDITY !”

These lines are merely prefatory. As the Bard lived in an age when Druidism was upon the decline, he found it expedient to assert the importance of his own pontifical the Welsh language, preserve the memorial of its ancient dignity. It is called Pren Awyr, the Æthereal tree; Pren Uchelvar, the tree of the high summit; and has four other names, derived from Uchel, lofty.

We find, by the conclusion of the poem, that this, and the other select plants, were amongst the ingredients of the mystical cauldron, which had been contrived by Ceridwen, the British Ceres. This produced the stream of Gwion, to which were ascribed, not only genius, and the power of inspiration, but also the reign of serenity, which, as we have been told, in the chair of Ceridwen, immediately commenced upon the display of the celestial bow, at the conclusion of the deluge.

This cauldron, in short, purified the votaries of Druidism, for the celebration of certain mystical rites, which commemorated the preservation of mankind in the ark, and the great renovation of nature.

That a people so strongly attached to their national customs, as the ancient Britons are known to have been, should have pertinaciously adhered to the religion of their ancestors; that the British Ceres should have maintained her honours in the obscure corners of the country, as late as the sixth century; and that her votaries should have appeared in public during that age, or in the interval, between the dominion of the Romans and that of the Saxons, is not greatly to be wondered at. There seems to have been several parts of Wales into which Christianity, as yet, had scarcely penetrated; or where, at least, it had not prevailed. Hence Brychan is commended “for bringing up his children and grand-children in learning, so as to be able to shew the faith in Christ, to the Cymry, where they were without the faith.”*

But that the Welsh princes, to the latest period of their government, should not only tolerate, but patronize the old superstition; and that the mysteries of Ceres should be celebrated in South Britain, as late as the middle of the twelfth century, are facts, as singular as they are indisputable.

Many of the most offensive ceremonies must, of course, have been either retrenched or concealed; but there is authentic proof, that the honours and the mysteries of Ceridwen did remain. Some of the paragraphs which authenticate this fact, I have produced in the first section of this essay, to which I refer the reader.

Before I look for additional evidence, I shall offer a few hints, with a view of accounting for the fact itself.

The commemorations of the deluge were so pointed and clear, in the mystical rites of the Britons, that when the Bards became acquainted with scripture history, they perceived, and frequently alluded to, the connection between their own national traditions, and the sacred records, respecting Noah and his family. Hence they considered their own as a genuine descendant of the patriarchal religion, and therefore, as not absolutely irreconcilable with Christianity.

* Owen's Cam. Biog. V. Brychan.—From the Triads.

The Roman laws and edicts, had for some ages, restrained the more cruel customs, and the bloody sacrifices of the Druids: what now remained was their code of mystical doctrines, together with their symbolical rites.

The Bards were influenced by their profession, and the princes, who from their infancy, had been accustomed to hear and admire the songs of the Bards, were induced, by national prejudice, to regard these as innocent, at least, if not meritorious: and to fancy, that they might be good Christians enough, without wholly relinquishing their heathenish superstitions,

The ministers of Christianity thought otherwise, and sometimes refused Christian burial to these Gentile priests: and there are many instances of the Bards themselves, promising a kind of recantation, sometime before their death.

Conscience being soothed by these palliatives, gave way to a cogent argument, in favour of the Bardic institution, which was supposed to give a strong support to personal fortitude; and to animate the spirit of national independence, during times, the most difficult and disastrous.

Such appears to have been the feeling of Hywel, the son of Owen Gwynedd, who succeeded his father, in the principality of North Wales, and died in the year 1171.

We may infer from the following poem, that this prince had been initiated into the lesser mysteries of Ceridwen, and that he eagerly longed for admittance to the greater, namely, those of the covered coracle, which were conducted by Gwyddnaw and his son: for I shall shew hereafter, that, by the Steed, in the mystical lore of the Bards, is meant a boat, or vessel upon the water; and here we find the meaning ascertained by other circumstances.

SONG BY HYWELL, THE SON OF OWEN.*

“ I love in the summer season, the prancing steed of the “ placid smiling chief, in the presence of the gallant lord,
 “ who rules the foam-covered, nimbly-moving wave. But “ another has worn the token of the apple spray: † my “ shield remains white upon my shoulder; the wished for “ atchievement have I not obtained, though great was my “ desire..

“ Ceridwen, lofty and fair—slow and delicate in her de“ scending course—her complexion is formed of the mild “ light, in the evening hour ‡—the splendid, graceful, “ bright, and gentle lady of the mystic song—even in “ bending a rush would she totter—so small, so delicate, so “ feebly descending!

* W. Archaiol. p. 278.

† That is, “ another has been the successful candidate—he carries the emblem of victory; whilst my shield retains a blank surface, not blazoned with the desired atchievement.”

Hywel lived in an age of Chivalry; hence the metaphors in this passage.

‡ The new moon, with her small and pallid crescent, was the symbol of this goddess.

We have already seen some hints of a solemn oath, that was administered to the aspirants, before they were admitted to the mystical rites of these characters: accordingly, the Welsh Archaology supplies us with an old formulary of introduction in very obscure language, and uncouth orthography, which seems to have been used upon these occasions.

Arthur and Cai are represented, as approaching the gate of the sanctuary, which was guarded by the hierophant, and commencing the following dialogue—

ARTHUR.

“What man is he that guards the gate?”

HIEROPHANT.

“The severe hoary one, with the wide dominion—Who is the man that demands it?”

ARTHUR.

“Arthur and the blessed Cai.”

HIEROPHANT.

“What good attends thee, thou blessed one, thou best man in the world!—Into my house thou canst not enter, unless thou wilt preserve.”

CAI.

“I will preserve it, and that thou shalt behold; though the birds of wrath should go forth, and the three attendant ministers should fall asleep, namely, the son of the Creator, Mabon the son of Mydron, attendant upon the wonder-

“ ful supreme Ruler, and Gwyn, the Lord of those who descend from above.”

HIEROPHANT.

“ Severe have my servants been, in preserving their institutes. Manawydan, the son of Llyr, was grave in his counsel. Manawydd truly brought a perforated shield, from Trevryd; and Mabon, the son of Lightning, stained the straw with clotted gore: and Anwas, the winged, and Llwech Llawinawg, (the ruler of the lake) were firm guardians of the incircled mount—Their Lord preserved them, and I rendered them complete.”

“ Cai! I solemnly announce—though all three should be slain; when the privilege of the grove is violated, danger shall be found!”

The remainder of this obscure piece, describes the different characters which were supported by Arthur and Cai, after their initiation, and the different fates which attended them. The passage before us may be understood, as involving a very solemn oath. The Aspirant engages, in the presence of the Hierophant, who personates his god, to preserve the laws of the sanctuary, however he may be assaulted by enemies, or deserted by his friends; whilst the chief priest denounces in awful obscurity, the inevitable ruin which will attend the violation of this sacred engagement.

Here we also find, that during the performance of the mystical rites, the Hierophant was attended by three priests, each of whom personated a god. This is in perfect conformity with the usage of the Greeks. For, we are told, that in the celebration of the Eleusinian mysteries, four priests officiated. The Hierophant, who represented the Great Creator: the torch-bearer, who personated the sun; the Herald, who was regarded as a type of Mercury, and the minister of the altar, who was venerated as the symbol of the moon:

Having now taken a considerable range in the grounds of British superstition, I shall dismiss the present subject, with the persuasion, that the facts which I have brought forward in this, and the preceding section, will furnish a master-key to the stores of British mythology.

It has been proved, that the great secret of the ancient Bards, who professed themselves disciples of the Druids, and consequently of the Druids themselves, resolves itself into the mystical rites of Hu and Ceridwen; that these characters were no other than the Bacchus and Ceres of antiquity, whose mysteries are acknowledged to have been duly celebrated in the British islands; and that the ceremonies and traditions of the Britons, had evident analogy with the superstitions of the Greeks, and of some of the Eastern nations.

It has also been seen, that the British mysteries commemorate the deluge, and those characters which are connected with its history; and thus furnish an undeniable confirmation of Mr. Bryant's opinion, that Ceres was an imaginary genius of the Ark, from whence the post-diluvian world derived their being, their laws, and their sciences; whilst on the other hand, that opinion supplies a lucid solution of the great Bardic ænigma, that every thing sacred, pure, and primitive, was derived from the cauldron of Ceridwen.

In British antiquities, the subject is new, and upon that account alone, may be deemed curious by many readers; but I regard it in a more important light, as in connexion with the discoveries of Mr. Bryant and Mr. Faber, affording a demonstration to the candid philosopher, that heathenism had no foundation of its own to rest upon, and that its tottering fabric merely leaned against the great historical truths, which are recorded in the sacred volume.

SECTION IV

The Design of the circular Temples and Cromlechs of the Druids.—Original Documents relative to the celebrated Structure of STONEHENGE.

THE superstition of the Britons, as we find it delineated in the ancient Bards, and probably, as it existed for many centuries, before the time of any of those Bards which are now extant, appears to have been a heterogeneous system, in which the memorials of the patriarch, and of the deluge, and some of the true principles of the patriarchal religion, were blended with a mass of absurdity, and an idolatrous worship of the host of heaven.

Thus, whilst Ceridwen is the genius of the Ark, we observe, that at the same time, the moon is her representative in the heavens. Her husband, Tegid or Saidi, commemorates Noah; but he is also viewed in the planet Saturn; and by the name of Hu, he even takes possession of the solar orb. Avagddu, the black accumulation, which appalled the world at the deluge, has brightened into Rhuvawn Bevyr, or the splendor of the regenerated sun.

Hence we must expect to find, that the temples which were sacred to this motley superstition, had some reference to the celestial, as well as to the terrestrial objects of adoration.

It has been already remarked, that Cadeiriath Saidi, or the language of the chair of Saidi, was personified; and that he constituted an important character in British mythology.

But such an ideal personage as this, could have been nothing more than a representative of the sacred ceremonies, doctrine, laws, and institutes of Druidism: as exhibited and taught, in the temple or sanctuary of Ceridwen, and of the other mythological group.

This temple was named Caer Sidi, the circle, or sanctuary of Sidi; and Taliesin's presidency, as high priest in that temple, was stiled Cadair Caer Sidi, the chair of Caer Sidi. The doctrine and the law which he pronounced from that chair, were therefore, the Cadeiriaith, or language of the chair. Let us now inquire, why the name of Caer Sidi was appropriated to the Druidical temples.

I might cut this matter short, by asserting upon the authority of Mr Bryant, that Sidi, or Σιδῆ, was one of the names of Ceres.

“ As the Ark, says that great mythologist, was looked upon as the mother of mankind, and stiled Da-Mater, so it was figured under the resemblance of the Ῥοία, Pomegranate, since abounding with seeds, it was thought no improper emblem of the Ark, which contained the rudiments of the future world. Hence the deity of the Ark was named Rhoia, and was the Rhea of the Greeks.”
 “ —Another name of the pomegranate was Sidè (Σιδῆ, Sidee) of which name there was a city in Pamphylia, and another in Bocotia, which was said to have been built by SIDE, the daughter of Danaus, which may be in a “ great measure true: for by a daughter of Danaus, is meant

 “ a priestess of Da-Naus, the Ark, the same as Da-Mater.”*

According to this deduction, Sidee must have been as legitimate a name as Rhea, for the genius of the Ark; and it must have represented that sacred vessel, as hitherto impregnated with its seeds; or, as containing the patriarch and his family, who became objects of superstitious veneration, to succeeding ages.

But the British Caer Sidi was derived through another channel. It appears from the spoils of the deep, one of the principal of the mystical poems of Taliesin,† that the original Caer Sidi, and the prototype of that sanctuary, in which our Bard presided, was no other than the sacred vessel, in which the mythological Arthur and his seven friends escaped the general deluge. Thus the Britons regarded Caer Sidi as a name of the Ark.

But as the Britons, like many other heathens, had blended their commemorations of the patriarch and his family, with the worship of the host of heaven; as the sun, moon, and planets, were now viewed as emblems of their consecrated progenitors, and of their sacred ship, and probably had engrossed the greatest part of popular veneration; so we find that the name of Caer Sidi, or Sidin, was transferred from the sacred ship, to that great circle, in which those luminous emblems of their gods presided and expatiated. In British astronomy, it was become the name of the Zodiac.

* Analys. V. II. p. 380.

† Appendix, No. 3.

Agreeably to the idiom of the Welsh language, the words Caer Sidi, or Sidin, imply the circle, or inclosed place of the revolution. We may, therefore, admire the dexterity with which the genius of mythology appropriated the title, first, to the vessel in which all the surviving inhabitants of the world performed the greatest revolution recorded in history; secondly, to that celestial circle, in which the luminaries of the world perpetually revolve; and lastly, to the Druidical temples, which appear from the works of the Bards, to have had a marked reference, both to the sacred ship, and to the Zodiac.

Their reference to the former may be proved, not only from the spoils of the deep, but also from Taliesin's poem upon the sons of Llyr,* where he tells us, that his chair, or presidency, was sacred to Ceridwen.

Neud amug ynghadeir o beir Ceridwen!
Handid rydd fy nhafawd,
Yn addawd gwawd Ogyrwen.

“Is not my chair protected by the cauldron of Ceridwen? Therefore, let my tongue be free, in the sanctuary of the praise of the goddess.”

And again, in the same poem, he names and describes this presidency—

Ys cyweir fy nghadeir ynghaer Sidi
Nis plawdd haint a henaint a fo yndi
Ys gwyr Manawyd a Phryderi
Tair Orian y am dan a gan rhegddi

* Appendix, No. 1.

And were this to be undertaken, by a people who abhorred covered temples, and either disallowed the use of sculpture, or else were ignorant of the art; the central figures would be represented by rude masses of wood or stone, and the rude pillars of the constellations would occupy the outward circle, as in the British monuments, delineated by Dr. Borlase and other antiquaries.

That the Druidical temples were generally of a round form, appears by the appellative terms which the Bards constantly use in describing them, as Caer Sidi, the circle of revolution; Côr, a round or circle, Cylch, a circle; and Cylch Byd, the circle of the world, which occurs in Aneurin and Taliesin.*

It is also evident, that they were composed of stone: for Aneurin, Taliesin, and Merddin, speak of the stones which composed these circles. But let us endeavour to identify one of their circular temples, that we may have some rule to judge of the rest.

In the poems of Hywel, the son of Owen, which I have already quoted, that prince says expressly, that the proud-wrought inclosure in the Gyrylchi, in the desert of Arvon, in Eryri, or Snowden, and towards the shore, was the Caer, or sanctuary of the mystical goddess, and the chosen place of her daughter Llywy, or the British Proserpine.

The topography of this temple is so minutely pointed

* To this I may add, Cylch Balch Newwy, the proud, or magnificent celestial circle, round which the majestic oaks, the symbols of Taronwy, the god of thunder, spread their arms.

Taliesin, Cerdd Daronwy.

out, that the spot cannot be mistaken: and if we find here a monument which has any appearance of representing the Zodiac, or Celestial Caer Sidi, it may serve as a guide, in distinguishing other British monuments of the same kind.

Dwy-Gyoylchi is still known, as the name of a parish, in the very spot where the Cambrian prince fixes his Caer Wen Glaer, or sanctuary of the illustrious Lady, in the deserts of Arvon, in Eryri, and towards the sea: and here the remains of the Caer are still to be found.

The annotator upon Camden, having described a strong fortress, “ seated on the top of one of the highest mountains, of that part of Snowden, which lies towards the sea;” gives the following account of this ancient temple.

“ About a mile from this fortification, stands the most remarkable monument in all Snowden, called Y Meineu Hirion, upon the plain mountain, within the parish of Dwy-Gyoycheu, above Gwddw Glâs. It is a circular entrenchment, about twenty-six yards diameter; on the outside whereof, are certain rude, stone pillars; of which about twelve are now standing, some two yards, and others five foot high: and these are again encompassed with a stone wall. It stands upon the plain mountain, as soon as we come to the height, having much even ground about it; and not far from it, there are three other large stones, pitched on end, in a triangular form.”*

We are also told that, at the distance of about three furlongs from this monument, there are several huge heaps, or Carns, and also cells, constructed of huge stones, fixed in the ground, and each cell covered with one or two stones of a superior size.

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 805.

Such was the sanctuary which was held sacred to Ceridwen and Llywy, or Ceres and Proserpine, in the middle of the twelfth century, an age in which the honours of those characters were not forgotten: for we have already seen, that their mysteries, strange as the fact may appear, were still celebrated, not only with toleration, but also under the patronage of the British princes.

Hywel's avowed veneration of those mysteries, into which he himself had been initiated, would not have permitted him to speak lightly, and at random, upon the subject of this hallowed fane. And his own studious disposition, joined with his rank in society, must have procured him access to the best information, respecting the antiquities of his country, had any deep research been requisite. But this case presented no difficulty. There could have been no doubt of the intention of a temple, which was sacred to an existing superstition. A regular succession of mystical Bards had hitherto been maintained, from the days of Taliesin, and from the ages of pure Druidism.

Hence, by comparing this structure with the facts previously stated, we may fairly conclude, that in those ages, the temples which were sacred to British mysteries, were regarded as images of Caer Sidi, or the Zodiac, as they were dignified with its name, or else were so constructed as to represent some of the phænomena, displayed in that celestial zone,

In this monument of the Gyvylchi, we find the circle of twelve stones, which undoubtedly represented the twelve signs, the same which appeared upon the Antique, published by M. De Gebelin, commemorative of the history of Ceres and Proserpine.

From the description quoted out of Camden, imperfect as it is, we may infer, that the temple of the Gyvylchi is a work of the same kind as those circular monuments of stone, which have attracted the notice of the curious, from the South to the North extremity of this Island, and which our best antiquaries pronounce, not only to have been temples of the heathen Britons, but also to have been constructed upon astronomical principles: in short, to have represented, either the Zodiac itself, or certain cycles and computations, deduced from the study of astronomy. Hence the frequent repetition of twelve, nineteen, thirty, or sixty stones, which has been remarked in the circles of these monuments.

Our fane of Snowden, it is admitted, could never have vied in magnificence, with a Stonehenge, or an Abury. In the ages of Druidism, it could have been regarded only as a provincial sanctuary, but the number of twelve stones which constitutes its circle, is twice repeated in the stupendous fabric of Abury; it frequently occurs also, in the Cornish monuments, noted by Dr. Borlase; and it is found in the complete temple of Classerniss, in the Western Isles of Scotland. Here is also the cell, consisting of three huge stones, erected in a triangular form, as in the structure of Abury.

From this little Cambrian chapel, then let us endeavour to trace our way to the larger monuments of British superstition.

That Stonehenge was a Druidical temple of high eminence, and that its construction evinces considerable proficiency in astronomy, has been the decided opinion of many respectable antiquaries. That I may not multiply proofs of a fact so generally known, I shall only extract part of the learned Mr. Maurice's remarks upon that celebrated monument.

“ But of all the circular temples of the Druids, (says the “ author of the Indian Antiquities) as Stonehenge is the “ most considerable, a description of it from the most an“ cient and the most modern writer on that subject—is “ here presented to the reader. I take it for granted, that “ the passage cited by Diodorus, from Hecataeus, and be“ fore alluded to by Mr. Knight, is [to be understood of]
 “ this identical temple of Stonehenge, or Choir Gaur, its “ ancient British name, meaning, according to Stukeley,
 “ the Great Cathedral or Grand Choir; and surely, no na“ tional church could ever better deserve that distinguished “ appellation.”*

The author then quotes the passage from Diodorus, respecting the Hyperborean temple of Apollo, to which he adds the following remark—“ Such is the account given “ near two thousand years ago, of this circular temple, FOR “ IT COULD MEAN NO OTHER, by Diodorus the Sicilian, “ from a writer still prior in time.”†

* Ind. Antiq. V. VI. p. 123.

† Ibid. p. 125.

Mr. Maurice, in the next place, extracts the description which is given of the same monument, in Mr. Gough's edition of Camden; and these are his remarks upon it.

“ There is no occasion for my troubling the reader with “ any extended observations, on these accounts of Stone-
 “ henge. Whoever has read, or may be inclined to read
 “ my history of oriental architecture, as connected with “ the astronomical, and mythological notions of the anci“ ents, printed in the third volume of this work—may see “ most of the assertions realized, in the form and arrange“ ment of this old Druid temple. For, in the first place,
 “ it is circular, as it is there proved, all ancient temples to “ the Sun and Vesta—were. In the second place, the “ Adytum or Sanctum Sanctorum, is of an oval form, re“ presenting the Mundane egg, after the manner that all “ those adyta, in which the sacred fire perpetually blazed—
 “ were constantly fabricated. In the third place, the situ“ ation is fixed astronomically, as we shall make fully evi“ dent when we come to speak of Abury: the grand en“ trances, both of this temple, and that superb monument
 “ of antiquity, being placed exactly North-east, as all the “ gates or portals of the ancient caverns, and cavern temples
 “ were; especially those dedicated to Mithra, that is, the “ sun.--

“ In the fourth place, the number of stones and uprights
 “ (in the outward circle) making together, exactly sixty, “ plainly alludes to that peculiar, and prominent feature of “ Asiatic astronomy, the sexagenary cycle—while the “ number of stones, forming the minor circle of the cove,
 “ being exactly nineteen, displays to us the famous Metonic,
 “ or rather Indian cycle; and that of thirty, repeatedly “ occurring, the celebrated age, or generation of the “ Druids.

“ Fifthly, the temple being uncovered, proves it to have “ been erected under impressions, similar to those which “ animated the ancient Persians, who rejected the im-
 “ pious idea of confining the Deity—within—an inclosed “ shrine, however magnificent, and therefore, consequently,
 “ at all events, it must have been erected before the age
 “ of Zoroaster, who flourished more than five hundred “ years before Christ, and who first covered in the Persian “ temples.

“ And finally, the heads and horns of oxen and other “ animals, found buried on the spot, prove that the san-“ guinary rites, peculiar to the Solar superstition—were “ actually practised, within the awful bounds of this hallowed “ circle.”*

I have omitted a few clauses, in which the ingenious author derives the British, immediately from the Indian superstition; partly because his opinion might appear to disadvantage, unsupported by the arguments which are adduced in various parts of this dissertation; and partly because I have some kind of evidence, that what was exotic in the system of the Britons, came to them by the way of Cornwall, and therefore was probably derived to them from the Phœnicians.*

Our learned author's opinion of the dignity of this structure, of the knowledge of astronomy displayed in its plan, and of its destination as a heathen temple, I should suppose will hardly be disputed. Yet still, those gentlemen who assert, that the Druids left no monuments behind them, but their venerated oaks, will pertinaciously contend, that no evidence has been produced to connect the design of this stupendous pile, with the national superstition of the Britons.

X

* Ind. Antiq. V. VI. p. 123.

† See Sect. 5.

It appears to me, however, that considerable evidence of this connection does exist; and I hope, I shall not perform an unacceptable office to the public in bringing it forward.

A great and notorious event, namely, the massacre of the British nobility in the neighbourhood of Stonehenge, by Hengist, the Saxon king of Kent, furnished the ancient British writers with occasion, for the frequent mention of this venerable pile.

The story of this massacre is familiar to the old writers of England and Wales; but by way of introduction to the documents which I mean to produce, it may be proper to insert a connected account of its circumstances, from a modern author of the former nation.

Mr. Warrington, in his history of Wales, relates the transaction in this manner.

When Hengist and his Saxons approached the British coast, after the death of Vortimer, they found that the inhabitants, under the command of Vortigern, were fully determined to oppose their landing. Upon this occasion, the Saxon chief had recourse to an expedient, suggested by his wily and fertile imagination, as well as from a knowledge of the people, with whom he had to act. In this artifice, the weakness or the treachery of Vortigern was employed. Hengist sent to assure that monarch, that his purpose of coming into Britain was not to offer any violence to the kingdom, but only to make a vigorous opposition against his son Vortimer, whom he artfully pretended, he thought to have been alive.

It was likewise proposed by Hengist, that an interview should take place between them, and that each of the chiefs should meet at the place appointed, attended by the most eminent of his train; and in order to banish every idea of hostile intention, it was artfully suggested by the Saxon, that both parties should appear without their arms. The proposal was agreed to by the king; the time of meeting was fixed for the May following; and the place appointed for the interview was at Stonehenge, upon Salisbury plain.

In the meantime, Hengist having assembled his chieftains, laid open to them his design, that under the colour of meeting the Britons, for the purposes of peace, and to establish a lasting alliance, he intended to murder the chiefs who should attend Vortigern to the interview; that by striking so decisive a blow, he might cut the sinews of future resistance. At the same time he gave orders, that his train, who attended the meeting, should carry knives concealed in their sleeves; that when the signal was given, each of them should instantly stab the person who sat next to him; and he closed this infernal order, by requiring them to behave like men, and to shew no mercy to any person, but to the king.

Notwithstanding the many proofs the Saxons had given of their perfidy, the Britons, with a degree of credulity, peculiar to themselves, fell into the snare, and came unarmed to the place appointed for the interview; where, by the contrivance of Hengist, they were placed with his train, alternately at the tables, under the pretence of confidence, and of a friendly intercourse with each other.

When the festivity was at the height, and probably, in the unguarded moments of intoxication, Hengist gave the signal agreed on—Take your Seaxes. At that instant, every Saxon drew out his knife, and plunged it into the bosom of the person who sat next to him. Above three hundred of the British nobility, the most eminent for their talents, in the council or in the field, perished in this bloody carousal.—Vortigern was spared in the general carnage, though detained a prisoner by Hengist; probably with no other design, than as a cover to a subsequent act of the British prince, which carries with it a strong appearance of baseness; for in order to obtain his liberty, he made an assignment to the Saxon chief, of the counties of Norfolk and Sussex, and also confirmed him in the possession of his former territories.*

To these incidents of the massacre, many old writers add the exploit of Eidiol or Eidol, a British prince, who had the good fortune to escape. His character is recognized by English antiquaries, who call him Eldol or Edol, and say that he was Earl of Gloucester, in the year 461.†

* Warrington's Hist. of Wales, 1st Edit. p. 57.

† See Dugdale's Baronage, p. 1, with his authority; and Gibson's Camden, col. 267. Earl must be here regarded as a mere translation of his British title.

The Triads speak of this Eidiol's having killed an incredible number of the Saxons, on the day of Hengist's plot, with a quick-beam truncheon.* The Welsh chronicles of Tyssilio and Geoffry, which in this æra, may be allowed to blend some true history with their fable, limit the number which he slew, to seventy men. But these annalists, finding that Eidiol was both a temporal prince, and a bishop, have thought proper to give us two brothers of that name, styling one of them Earl, and the other Bishop of Gloucester. This must be a mistake. The two characters were united in one person, and I conjecture, that this person was no other than Emrys, or Ambrosius, who immediately after the massacre, was elevated to the British throne. The very same actions are ascribed to Eidiol and to Emrys, such as burying the British nobles, erecting their monument at Ambresbury, taking Hengist prisoner at Caer Gynan, or Conisborow, and causing him to be beheaded.† If this Eidiol was not Ambrosius, we must consider him as the great agent and counsellor of that prince, to whom his actions were consequently ascribed.

But to proceed. It were not to be expected, that the circumstances of this massacre, so memorable in the history of our country, should be passed over in silence by the Bards of the sixth century. Their lamentations upon the woeful subject, are frequent and pathetic. Of these, I shall produce two instances, which will fully explain the light, in which our

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 68.

† Compare W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 255, 256—271—273, with Gibson's Camden, Col. 847, and Warrington's Hist. of Wales, p. 64, and his authorities.

See also the songs of the Gododin, in the sequel of this section.

remote ancestors contemplated the celebrated fabric of Stonehenge. The first of these documents is the

*Song of CUHELYN.

Greid bleid blyghawd
 Gretyf detyf durawd
 Gnawd brawdwrïaeth

Gwr oet Eiteol
 Gorwy rëol
 Gordethol doeth

Gwyth vill Dragon
 Gosparth Brython
 Gosgyman weith

Gnawt tryganet
 Gnawt kyhidet
 Gorset metveith

Met win kyvran
 Marchauc midlan
 Man meidrolaeth.

Medrit mur Ior
 Maus pedir pedror
 MAWR COR KYVOETH.

* W. Archaiol. p. 164. In the table of contents, it is ascribed to a Bard of the eighth century; but in Mr. Owen's Cam. Biog. more accurately, to Cuhelyn the son of Caw, about the middle of the sixth century.

Moes breisc vrëyr
 Moes wirth vehir
 Milwr orwyth.

Maer claer kywid
 Mad cathyl kyvid
 Möidit ieith.

Mas cas nogdaw
 Maer antedawg
 Maredawg doeth.

Medel visci
 Mel vartoni
 Mynogi gwyth,

Myn vinad vron
 Medw mal ton
 Mor tros draeth.

Mer kerteu kein
 Myvir corein
 Mirein Anoeth.

Menestir Vytud
 Meuet vedud
 Molud esmwyth.

Music a gan
 Mal eur orian
 Man vyhanieth.

Gweith reith rysset

Gwich ruich rywet
Rinwet Rëen.

Rec rysiolav
Rec a archav
Ruymav Virchen.

Rhuthyr uthyr awel
Rynaut uvel
Ryvel febin.

Ruteur dyrlyt
Rychlut clotryt
Rihit adien

Reuvet parawd
Rin vyn wascawd
Tra gwawd wobrin.

Ry hait itawt
Rycheidw y nawt
Rac kawt gelyn.

Rychetwis detyf
Rychwynis gretyf
Rae lletyf Ogyrven.

Rae dac drossot
Reghit brid bod
Rot Cuhelin.

Of this poem, the following is as close a translation, as the concise and obscure language of the Bard will admit.

* Darkening was the sullen wrath of the wolf,* naturally addicted to the law of steel, his accustomed rule of decision.

At the time when the brave Eidiol was presiding in the circle, a man eminently distinguished for wisdom:

Then the chief, having malice in his designs against the Britons, made with them a pretended compact.

A proclamation was issued, inviting equal numbers to a conference at a banquet of mead.

The mead and wine are distributed by the knight of the inclosure, at the appointed spot:

And the spot appointed, was in the precinct of Iór; in the fair quadrangular area of THE GREAT SANCTUARY OF THE DOMINION.

To indulge the brawny chief—to indulge him whose virtue was the rushing of spears, the warrior, supreme in wrath,

The illustrious chief of song raises the munificent strain in the language of panegyric:

But death was the hateful reward of the indwelling chief of song, magnificent and wise.

The reaping blade confounded the honied strain of Bardism with the gratification of fury:

* Hengist, as it is fully evident from the subsequent passages.

The breast, intent upon violence, rages like the drunken wave of the sea, tumbling over the strand:

It overwhelms the pleasing strains, the study of the circle, the fair circle of Anoeth.

Thus, the minister of Buddud, possessing the talent to rehearse the gentle song of praise,

Chaunted his music, like a golden hymn, on the area of battle:

But it was the battle of sudden assault—of the dreadful, bursting shriek—the mysterious purpose of the chief,

Who exclaimed with a curse—“ I will rush forth”—with an execration—“ I will command! I will bind the sovereign :

“ Like the sudden bursting of a dreadful gale, blow ye up the conflagration of war against the youthful heroes.

“ The flaming gold will he merit, who overwhelms the renowned; and he shall be defended blameless :

“ Here is affluence provided for us :—the purpose of my mind is a protection from the obloquy of the enterprise !”

Pre-eminent was his merit, who strove to protect the sanctuary from the violence of the foe.

He did preserve the institute, though nature groaned indignant before the gentle goddess.

Instead of a tear shed over him, may his soul be gratified with this tribute of Cuhelin!

When the descriptions in this ancient poem are attentively compared with the incidents of the massacre perpetrated by Hengist, I think no doubt can remain as to the particular event of history to which the Bard refers.

Cuhelyn's design is clearly a tribute of respect to the memory of Eidiol, whose history is invariably connected with that of the Saxon chief. He is here described as high priest, or president of the sacred circle, and as knight of the inclosure, who distributed the liquor at the feast, and afterwards preserved the sanctuary.

I shall presently shew, that each of these particulars is fully confirmed by the strains of Aneurin; from which we also learn, that the feast was celebrated, and the horrid deed perpetrated, in a suite of temporary buildings, upon the Ystre, or Cursus, into which one of the avenues leads from the great temple. "This (Cursus) is half a mile
 " North from Stonehenge, ten thousand feet, or two miles
 " long, inclosed by two ditches, three hundred and fifty
 " feet asunder."* Here was the precinct of Iór, the fair quadrangular area of the great sanctuary of the dominion. Iór is a name sometimes applied to the Supreme Being, but borrowed from British mythology, where it seems to have meant the sun—moving within his orbit, or circle.

* Ind. Antiq. Vol. VI. p. 193.

Both in name and character, this British divinity seems to be closely allied to the Orus of Egypt, “ The supposed son of Isis, who was an emblem of the ark, that receptacle, which was styled the mother of mankind. He is represented as undergoing, from the Titans, all that Osiris suffered from Typhon; and the history, at the bottom, is the same. Hence it is said of Isis, that she had the power of making people immortal; and that, when she found her son Orus in the midst of the waters, dead through the malice of the Titans, she not only gave him a renewal of life, but also conferred upon him immortality.”*

“ Both Orus and Osiris were styled Heliadæ, and often represented as the sun himself.”†.

The identity of Ceridwen and Isis, as to general-character, has been already shewn; and as we find, that the former was present in this circle by the name of Lleddv Ogyrven, the gentle goddess, so Iôr seems to have been a name of her recovered son, Avagddu.

Geoffry of Monmouth's Choir Gaur, or more accurately, Côr Gawr, the great circle, or sanctuary, has been often quoted by antiquaries, as the British name of this fabric of Stonehenge. In this poem of Cuhelyn, we have not only Mawr Côr, which is exactly synonymous with the other, but Mawr Côr Cyvoeth, the great circle, or sanctuary of the dominion, implying its prerogative, as the metropolitan temple of the Britons; which fully comes up to the idea of Dr. Stukeley and Mr. Maurice.

* Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 327, 330.

† Ibid. p. 394.

That a heathen temple should be deemed to retain such a prerogative in the middle of the fifth century, must be regarded as a singular fact. But the populace of Britain had not hitherto been radically converted from their national superstition; and in this age, pelagianism, which blended much of that superstition with a few shreds of christianity, was very prevalent amongst them.

Aneurin, as well as our present author, speaks of the murder of a Bard, as the first act of open outrage committed at the feast. This victim is here described as indwelling, or resident in the temple. He is styled the illustrious president of song, and the minister of Buddud, the same, I presume, as Buddug, the goddess of victory.

Upon the whole, we have, in this little poem, a full acknowledgement of the dignity of the venerable pile of Stonehenge, and a direct testimony of its consecration to several known objects of superstition, amongst the heathen Britons.

I must now hasten to prepare the reader for the other British document, which I promised upon the same subject. This is no other than the celebrated Gododin, a work of about nine hundred lines, composed by Aneurin, a Northumbrian Briton. It will be necessary to introduce this work, with some prefatory observations.

Mr. Turner, in his Vindication, has fully ascertained the facts, that such a Bard as Aneurin did live between the years 500 and 600, and that the Gododin is his genuine production. The great antiquary, Edward Llwyd, dates the composition, An. 510.

An historical poem of that age, composed by an individual of a British tribe, which for a thousand years has ceased to exist, may surely be deemed in itself a subject of curiosity. This circumstance, together with the high importance which the English antiquaries attach to the structure of Stonehenge, will, I trust, apologize for the necessary length of the present article.

The name of the Gododin is not new to the public. Several translated specimens of it have appeared, and some of these allured the lofty muse of Gray. The work has been pronounced a noble heroic poem, and the subject is said to have been a disastrous action, in which the author himself bore a part. But the work has been celebrated, more than studied. Not one of its admirers, that I know of, has attempted to identify the event, which constitutes its principal subject; or has even suspected that it alludes to the actions of Hengist, or to the massacre at Stonehenge: so that I must either establish my proposition, that such is the main business of the poem, or else expect some severe chastisement from the modern critics of my country.

For the imperfection of the view which has hitherto been taken of this work, I may account upon many scores. The poem is ancient, and wholly unattended with explanatory notes. The subject has not much local connexion with the affairs of Wales, and consequently has excited but little inquiry amongst the natives, the only people who understand the language of the Bard. The orthography is obsolete; and the author's dialect had some original variation from that of any Welsh tribe. The Bard seldom introduces the proper names of his heroes; but, as it is usual in popular songs, and especially political songs, composed in troublesome times, generally describes them by characteristic epithets, which, however obvious they may have been in the days of the author, are now become much less so by the lapse of ages. All these circumstances conspire to draw a veil of obscurity over a work, which is viewed through the medium of thirteen centuries. And this obscurity is abundantly increased by the bad preservation of the text. Of this, no greater proof need be given, than a mere exhibition of the various readings, which nearly equal the number of lines.

These, for the most part, are only orthographical. They seem to have arisen from the misapprehension of the characters, or letters, of some one copy, which was either antiquated or defaced. But this supposed original of the modern transcribers, was evidently imperfect; for all the known copies agree in exhibiting certain passages in mere fragments, without connection of sense or metre.

Such are the reasons why the Gododin has not hitherto been translated entire, or even perfectly understood.

But where am I to ground my own pretensions, as an interpreter of this difficult work? I can only say, in answer to this query, that over and above the share which the Gododin has obtained in my general attention to the Bards, I have had occasion to transcribe the whole three times over; and once very lately, from a good copy on vellum, written apparently about the year 1200, and which was not used by the editors of the Archaialogia. I have also reduced all the author's words into alphabetical order, with a reference to the lines in which they occur. This labour rendered Aneurin's expressions and phrases familiar to me, gave me a facility in comparing part with part, and suggested a reference, whenever I met with a passage in any other Bard, which seemed to bear upon the subject of the Gododin. And as all the parts of the work are not equally obscure, I now began to understand passages of considerable length, and to fix some leading marks, as so many clues to the investigation of the general subject.

Thus prepared, I went over the whole Gododin, line by line, with Mr. Owen's Dictionary at my elbow, setting down the literal construction, as nearly as it could be obtained, however incoherent it might appear. And in revising my papers, I plainly perceived, that this work cannot be regarded as a single poem, composed upon any one determinate plan; but that, on the contrary, it consists of a series of short detached songs, relating principally to one great subject, which is taken up and dismissed in one of those detached parts, and again resumed in another. This discrimination agrees with the title of the work, in the very ancient copy upon vellum, described by Edward Llwyd,* where it is called Y Gododynne, in the plural number—The Gododins. In the preface to the Incantation of Cynvelyn, and of Maelderw,† this work is described as a series of Odleu a Chanuau, odes and songs; and it is intimated, that they originally amounted to tri chanu a thriugaint a thri-chant, 363 songs. In the old and valuable copy, lately communicated to me by my excellent friend, Mr. Jones,‡ what now remains of the work is divided into ninety-four parts, ornamented with large initials, in green and red alternately. And the idea of the detached nature of these songs, is confirmed by the author himself, who tells us, that it was his custom to compose a Cenig, sonnet, or short song of the Gododin, to amuse the nightly horrors of a solitary prison.

* Archæol. Britan. p. 262.

† W. Archæol. V. I. p. 61.

‡ The learned author of the History of Brecknockshire.

I also perceived that the great catastrophe, which the Bard deploras in most of the remaining songs, was not, as it has been generally represented, the fall of 360 nobles in the field of battle, to which they had rushed forth in a state of intoxication, but the massacre of 360 unarmed BRITISH nobles, in time of peace, and at a feast, where they had been arranged promiscuously with armed SAXONS.

An event of this kind cannot be supposed to have wholly escaped the notice of history : yet it is clear, that neither history nor tradition, whether British or Saxon, has preserved the slightest hint of any such thing having happened in this island in the sixth century, or in any other period of the British annals, excepting in one instance, namely, the massacre of the Britons at Stonehenge, about the year 472.

The memory of this event is familiar to the historians of both nations ; and we shall find by the sequel, that the Bard confirms most of the incidents which have been recorded. This is, therefore, the identical catastrophe which Aneurin deploras.

But will this decision correspond with the age of Aneurin ?

The Bard represents himself as having been present at the bloody spectacle ; and Edward Llwyd refers the era of the Gododin to the year 510, and this, probably, upon the authority of the ancient MS. which he quotes in the same passage.

Here is no discordance of dates, which may not be fairly reconciled. There is no improbability in Aneurin's having attended the feast, as a young Bard, in 472, and his having bewailed the friends of his youth thirty-eight years afterwards, when, as an old, unfortunate warrior, he had fallen into the hands of the foe, and was confined in a dreary dungeon.

And indeed, it appears evidently from the face of the work, that the events which the Bard commemorates, had preceded the date of the composition by a long interval of years; for he supports the credit of the circumstances which he details—by the relation of a Briton, who had escaped—by the particulars which were known to Taliesin—by the oral testimony of some old chiefs—and by the authority of certain songs, which had been composed upon the occasion. He also touches upon the affairs of those eventful times, which had succeeded the fatal feast. So that, upon the whole, it is clear, that an interval of thirty or forty years must have elapsed between the woful subject of Aneurin's songs, and the date of their composition.

When we have made due allowance for this interval, we must necessarily carry back the catastrophe, which the Bard deplores, from the date of the composition in 510, into the age of Hengist, and fix it, with the greatest appearance of accuracy, at the era of the celebrated massacre at Stonehenge. And to the circumstances which history records of this event, the allusions of the Bard so precisely and exclusively apply, that it is impossible to refer them to any other event.

This is my decided opinion. I foresee, however, a few objections, which it may be proper to obviate.

It will be asked—Why has not the Bard mentioned Hengist, and his British partizans, by name? To this it may be answered, that Aneurin, at the time when he composed most of his songs, was a prisoner of war in the hands of the Saxons. The introduction of names might have subjected him to personal danger: he therefore chose the safer way of gratifying his resentment, by giving such bold hints of the affairs, and the individuals to which he alluded, that they could not be mistaken; and this method afforded him an opportunity of painting his indignation more forcibly, by sarcastic epithets, than he could have done it by explicit attacks upon the person of Hengist.

Against the locality of Aneurin's subject, as referred to the temple of Stonehenge, it may be objected, that the term Gododin, in Nennius, implies the region of the Ottadini, between the rampart of Antonine, and the wall of Severus: whilst in several passages of this poem, we find that Gododin means the same as Cattraeth, the place where the nobles assembled at the feast, and where they fell.

This is certainly an ambiguity; and it was probably intended as such, for the same prudential reason which I have mentioned above. But if we attend to the composition, and the actual application of the name, we shall find that it furnished a fair opportunity for a double interpretation.

Godo is a partial covering, and Din a fence or outwork. As applied to the region of the Ottadini, it means that district which is partly covered or protected by the Northern rampart; and the word is equally descriptive of the British temples or sanctuaries, which were open at top, yet protected by a surrounding rampart or bank.

And that the name of Godó was actually appropriated to these temples, we have already seen, in treating of the family of the British Ceres: for Seithin Saidi, Janus or Saturn, the representative of the patriarch, is styled Porthawr Godó, the guardian of the gate of Godó, or the uncovered sanctuary.

Cattraeth, or, according to the older orthography, Catraith, is liable to the same objection, and admits of the same solution. This name has some similarity to Catarick, near Richmond, in Yorkshire, the Cataracton of the ancients. Yet it is not hence to be suspected, that by Gododin and Cattraeth, our author meant to point out an Ottadinian town of that name; for Cataracton was not within, or very near the borders of the Ottadini; so that some other meaning must be sought.

In the preceding section, to which I have just referred, it is remarked, that the same Seithin Saidi had a son, named Cadeiriaith, the language of the chair or presidency; and also Cadraith or Catraith, which seems to be only a contraction of the former. This mythological character certainly represents the laws, &c. of the Druids, pronounced from the chair of presidency, or Bardic cathedral, hence figuratively applied to the great temple itself. And, from many passages of Aneurin's work, it is evident that this is the precise import of his Catraith.

Having, as I have already stated, obtained such a general view of the nature and subject of the Gododin, as enabled me to estimate the value of most of the various readings, I sat down patiently to re-translate the whole as closely as possible, without sacrificing perspicuity to the mere idiom of my author, and with the most minute attention to Mr. Owen's explanation of obsolete words, even in those passages which seemed most intelligible. And, I think, I have made out Aneurin's meaning with tolerable clearness, considering the nature of the work, and the state of the copy; though it may be admitted as probable, that a careful examination of our original historians would reflect some additional light upon several passages.

I had some thoughts of adding the British text, as accurately as it can be obtained, from a collation of the various copies; but as it is of considerable length, I have omitted it, in compassion to the English reader.

The division of the songs in this work, was the result of my own observation and conjecture; and therefore, though it be generally confirmed by Mr. Jones's ancient copy, I submit it to the censure of the critical reader, who, by passing over that division, may read the Gododin as one entire poem.

THE GODODIN.

SONG I.

“GREDYF GWR OED GWAS.”*—W. Archaiol. p. 1.

Aneurin commemorates the young Bard, his Associate, whom Hengist had slain at the Feast. See the Poem of Cuhelyn, in the former Part of the Section, and No. 16 and 25, of the present Series.

MANLY was the soul of the youth, whose merit I record with sorrow. A swift thick-maned steed was under the thigh of the fair youth. His shield, light and broad, hung upon the slender courser. His blue and unspotted weapon was the assuager of tumult.†

With me shall remain no hatred towards thee. I will do better for thee—in poetry will I praise thee. The floor will be stained with blood, before thou shalt enjoy the genial

* Gredyf gwr oed gwas,
Gwrhyt a'm dias.

† The clean weapon of the Bard, like the Hasta Pura of the Romans, seems to have been an emblem of peace.—The Bards were regarded as heralds of peace.—See song 25, where this Bard is introduced by the name of Owen.
For Ethy aur a Phan, I read Ethyawr Aphan.

feast. The raven shall have his food, before thou wilt lift the hostile spear, O Owen, my dear companion!

There is sorrow in the plain, where the son of Marro was slaughtered!

—

SONG II.

“ CAEAWC CYNHAIAWC.”—p. 1.

The Bard descants upon the Manners of Hengist, and touches upon some Particulars of the Plot, which he appears to have concerted, in Part, with Vortigern, the British King.

ADORNED with his wreath,* the chief of the rustics announced, that upon his arrival, unattended by his host, and in the presence of the Maid,† he would 'give the mead; but he would strike the front of his shield,‡ if he heard the din of war, and to those whom he pursued, he would give no quarter.

But against those who would not retreat from battle, till their blood flowed like rivulets—against the heroes who

* Caeawc, wearing a wreath—This was a wreath of amber beads, as appears from the subsequent paragraphs, which also prove that the Bard means Hengist. I recollect no authority for ascribing wreaths of amber to the native Britons; but the costume appears upon many of the old Saxon coins, published by Camden.

† Bân, the maid, a name of Llywy, the British Proserpine, at whose festivals contention and tumult were deemed sacrilegious. See song 25.

‡ The phrase, Twl tal y rodawc repeatedly occurs. It has been translated, “the front of whose shield was pierced;” but it evidently implies, making a signal, by striking the shield.

would not give way, he cherished a dark resentment. The man of Gododin, upon his return before the tents of Madawc, has reported but one man in a hundred, who escaped from the hand of the water-dweller.*

Adorned with his wreath, the chief of the halberds which oppress the natives, like an eagle, rushed into our harbours when invited.† His compact ‡ took effect. His signal § was duly observed. He had devised a better stratagem. || Here, his party did not shrink, though they had fled before the army of Gododin. ¶ The water-dweller boldly invites us to a mixed assembly, where neither spear nor shield was to be admitted—" Thus there could be no strife " amongst the jovial company: the heroes would be pre- " served from a sudden stroke."

Adorned with a wreath was the leader of the sea-drifted

* The Bard describes the Saxons, in this work, by several terms, which imply sea rovers. Ar law 'r Mordei.

† The Saxons were invited, the first time, by Vortigern, and afterwards by Rowena.

‡ The compact of a friendly meeting, proposed by Hengist.

§ The signal for a general massacre of the unsuspecting British nobles.

|| His first stratagem was the marriage of his daughter; his better stratagem, the massacre.

¶ That is, before the forces of Vortimer, a votary of Godo, the British Ceres.

 The Bard continually reminds us, that the Britons had neither offensive nor defensive arms. In song 27, he mentions the plea of the Saxons, for the exclusion of shields—That there might be a clear space to light the area. The conclusion of this paragraph, contains a suggestion of Hengist, which is well explained by Mr. Warrington, p. 59. " And in order to banish every idea " of hostile intention, it was artfully suggested by the Saxon, that both par- " ties should appear without their arms."

wolves:* and of amber was that wreath which twined about his temples. Precious was the amber which could merit such a feast. The haughty† chief excludes men of a humble station, though Gwynedd and the North might have come to his share, with the concurrence of the son of partition‡—the prince with the broken shield.

The leader, adorned with his wreath, is armed like a hero. The general mark of his vengeance is the man who had been firm in the bloody field; but the part which he selects for himself, is to give the first thrust to the conductor of the host,|| before whose blades five bands had fallen—even of the dreadful men of Deira and Bernicia, twenty hundred had perished in an hour. § And as food for wolves is sooner provided than a nuptial feast; as ravens may be furnished with prey, before the funeral bier arrive; so the blood of our hero stains the floor before he lifts the spear:

* Kaeawc kynhorawc bleid e maran—Mr. Jones' MS. "Adorned with his wreath was the chief, even the wolf of the holme," i. e. Thanet.

† None but men of the most distinguished rank and character were admitted to the fatal banquet. And of those, the heroes who had fought under Vortimer, were especially selected for destruction, by the united treachery of Vortigern and Hengist. These were the great objects of resentment to both parties. The British King regarded them as the supporters of a rebellious son; and they had expelled the Saxon from the Island of Britain.

‡ Vortigern, who had divided his kingdom with Hengist.

|| Cynod, yw y gwr gwrđ eg gwyawr;
Cynran, yn racwan racbydinawr.

§ The Scots and Picts united their forces with the Saxons, who were stationed in the North; and their combined army was beaten by the lieutenants of Vortimer. Warrington, with his authorities, p. 52, 53.

yet the lofty Kyneid* shall be renowned, whilst a single Bard remains.

SONG III.

“ GWYR A AETH ODODIN.”—p. 2.

The Bard deplores the Fate of the Heroes, who had fallen at the Feast, and touches upon some of the great Actions which they had performed under Vortimer.

THE heroes went to Gododin cheerful and sprightly, whilst he, the bitter warrior, was disposing his blades† in order. A short season of peace had they enjoyed.‡ The son of Botgat§ gave them flattering language—his hand explained the meaning! They should have gone to churches to do penance—the old and the young, the bold and the powerful—the inevitable strife of death is piercing them.∥

The heroes went to Gododin—The insulting chief kindled

* The Man of Kent—Probably the British Prince whom Vortigern had dispossessed of his dominions, to make room for Hengist. This chief is introduced again, under the name of Tudwylch.

† The Seaxes, which Hengist's party privately wore at the feast.

‡ From the expulsion of the Saxons by Vortimer, to the period of Hengist's return—about two years and a half.

§ Botgat or Votgas—Hengist's father, whom the Saxons call Wetgisse.

∥ Death was inevitable, because the unarmed Britons were ranked alternately with armed Saxons—The next paragraph describes not a battle, but a sudden massacre.

in the assembly, an irresistible conflict. They were slain with blades, and without din, whilst the princely supporter of the living law was making an atonement.*

The heroes went to Cattræth—loquacious was their assemblage. Pale mead was their liquor, and it became their poison.

Three hundred with effective weapons, were set in array:† and after their noisy mirth—what a silence ensued! They should have gone to churches to do penance: the inevitable strife of death is piercing them.

The heroes went to Cattræth—They drank the intoxicating mead. Brave and prosperous had they been. I should wrong them, were I to neglect their fame! Amidst blades, red, tremendous, and murky; incessantly, and obstinately, would the dogs of battle fight.‡—“(O Saxons) had I “judged you to be favourers of the Bernician clan,§ like “a deluge, I would not have left a man of you alive!”—My companion I lost, when I was secure. Successfully had he withstood the terror of the usurper: the magnanimous

* It appears from the subsequent parts of the Gododin, that this interposer was the celebrated Eidiol, a distinguished prince, and president of the Bardic community; or, as he was styled in that wretched age of the British church, Bishop of the Britons. Upon this woful occasion, he acted as Seneschal, or Governor of the feast. He is to be regarded as Aneurin's hero; and from the particulars recorded of him, I conclude he is the same prince who is called Aurelius Ambrosius, Gwrawl Emrys, or hero of the ambrosial stones.

† That is, the retinue of Hengist, who privately wore their Seaxes or daggers.

‡ They had fought thus, in the wars of Vortimer.

§ Whether this apostrophe is to be understood, as coming from the Bard himself, or from some more warlike chief; its object is to reproach the Saxons for their treacherous combination with the Picts.

hero had disallowed the endowment of the *father-in-law—
Such was the son of Cian, from the stone of Gwyngwn.

The heroes went to Cattræth with the dawn. They were afflicted in time of peace, by those who had dreaded them.†

A hundred thousand‡ were the adversaries of three hundred, who uttered the groan of woe, stained with their own blood, when he,§ the most terrible, manfully stood up, before the retinue of the most courteous mountain chief.||

The heroes went to Cattræth with the dawn. Respected is their memory amongst their connexions. They drank the yellow, delicious, and potent mead, in that year, when many a Bard fell to the ground.¶ Redder than purple were the blades of the foe; their white-sheathed piercers, and their four-pointed helmets, before the retinue of the most courteous mountain chief.

The heroes went to Cattræth with the day. (Was there not a disparagement of battles!) They had made, indeed,

* This endowment was the kingdom of Kent, which Vortigern formally bestowed upon Hengist, his father-in-law, when he married Rowena.

† They were massacred at an ostensibly peaceful meeting, by the united plot of Hengist and Vortigern, to whom they had been equally formidable.

‡ An exaggerated number, implying the whole combined party of Vortigern and Hengist.

§ Hengist, who arose to give the signal of death.

|| The retinue of Vortigern, who was Lord of North Wales, a mountainous region—his great courtesy for the Saxons was a subject of indignation to the Britons.

¶ After the execution of Hengist's plot, the Bards defended the temple against the Saxons, where many of them must have fallen.

a mighty carnage.* Effectually had the gem of Christianity wielded his protecting blade. This is most meet, before men have engaged in friendly compact. However great the bloody destruction which they had occasioned, when the day was decided before the army of Gododin, was it not done under the conduct of the magnanimous leader!

To the hero who went to Cattræth with the day, or drank the white mead, in the celebration of May eve,† dismal was the preconcerted signal of the associated chief, which he had given in secret charge, through the excess of soaring ambition.

SONG IV.

“NI CHRYSIUS GATTRAETH.”—p. 2.

In this Song, and the next following, the Bard still dwelling upon the Subject of the calamitous Feast, intermixes some Particulars of the Bravery and Fate of a Chief whom he calls Tudvwch, which implies a Breach in the Land. By this singular Epithet, he seems to describe the Prince, whose Territories Vortigern had seized, and bestowed upon Hengist.

To Cattræth, there hastened not a hero, whose standard

* That is, in the wars of Vortimer, to which the Bard alludes, in the conclusion of the paragraph.

† Meinoethydd—This was the anniversary of the great mysteries of the Britons, as we have already seen in Hanes Taliesin. And it was the season appointed by Vortigern and Hengist for the solemn meeting. Warrington, p. 57.

had displayed such magnificence of enterprize; nor has the circle of Eidin (the living one) produced a scatterer of the ravagers, equally great with the lofty Tudvwelch, who being deprived of his lands and towns, had slaughtered the Saxons for seven days. His valour ought to have protected him in freedom. Dear is his memory amongst his illustrious associates.

When Tudvwelch, the supporter of the land, came to the feast, the area of the son of harmony* was made a plain of blood.

The heroes went to Cattraeth with the dawn.—Ah! none of them had the protection of shields †—When they had hastened to the Crai, ‡ assembled in gleaming arms, loud as the tumult of thunder, was the din of their shields.

The ambitious man, the fickle man, and the base man—he would tear them with his pikes and halberds.—Standing upon higher ground, he would gash them with his blades; but to the grief of the steel-clad commander, the water-dwellers were subdued by the proprietor of the land. Before Erthai, the warrior groaned.

* Mab Eitydd—This was the area of the Bards, or the Cursus, in front of their great temple, which was the scene of the massacre.

† Of these they were disarmed by the stratagem of Hengist.

‡ This probably means the bloody battle of Cray-ford, in which those heroes, under the conduct of Vortimer, had fought with Hengist, four or five years before the massacre. In that engagement, both parties seem to have claimed the victory.—See Gibson's Camden, Col. 224. Sammes, p. 390.

SONG V.

“ O VREITHELL GATTRAETH.”—p. 3.

Vortigern is here implicated in the Guilt and Disgrace of the Massacre.

OF the mixed assembly of Cattræth, when the tale is told, the natives are afflicted.—Long has their sorrow continued! There was a dominion without a sovereign, and a smoaking land.* Yet the sons of Godebawg, † an iniquitous tribe, would obstinately support the secret inviter of the great slaughterer. Dismal was the fate of dire necessity, which was decreed for Tudwlch, and the lofty Cywllch.

Together they drank the transparent mead, by the light of torches: though it was pleasant to the taste, it produced a lasting abhorrence.

He ‡ had previously stationed above Caer Echinig,

* This alludes to the dreadful ravages committed by Hengist, after the massacre.—See Warrington, p.60.

† The princely descendants of Coel Godebawg supported the cause of Vortigern, who had invited Hengist into Britain.

‡ That is Vortigern, “ the Inviter of the great slaughterer.” It appears from this, and other passages, that Vortigern was privy to the design of massacre, which he had encouraged, in order to get rid of those counsellors and heroes who had supported the cause of his son Vortimer, and might still be suspected of an intention to elect another sovereign. It is probable, however, that the British King was not aware of Hengist’s design to seize his person, and extort from him a large portion of his dominions, as the price of liberty.

the youthful heroes of a chief, who was in his retinue. He had previously ordered a horn to be filled on the Bludwe, that he might pledge the water-dweller. He had directed that the beverage should consist of mead and beer (Bragawd). He had previously ordered the display of gold and rich purple. He had given orders for pampered steeds, which might carry him safe away, whilst Gwarthlev and Enovryd were pouring forth the liquor. Previous to this, the benefactor whom the ebbing tide had left us,* gave out his private signal—a command which concerned, those, who had been loath to retreat.

—◆—

SONG VI.

“ ANAWR GYNHORUAN.”—p. 3.

This little Song, which seems to want the Conclusion, is unconnected with the preceding Subject. It appears evidently, to be an Elegy upon the Death of the victorious Vortimer, who had driven the Saxons out of the Country, and was afterwards poisoned in the Court of Vortigern, by the Contrivance of Rowena, the Daughter of Hengist.

AND now the lofty leader, the sun, is about to ascend :†
the sovereign most glorious, the Lord of the British Isle.

* That is Hengist, who, by hastening the execution of his plot, prevented the meditated retreat of Vortigern.

† This, I conceive, is not to be understood literally, as a hymn to the sun—the Bard is only comparing Vortimer to the sun, whom the mystical Bards acknowledged as a divinity.

For Néu, heaven, I read Náv, a Lord.

Direful was the flight, before the shaking of his shield, hastening to victory.

But there was an unkind cup in the court of Eiddin:* with ostentatious courtesy, the hero was invited to taste the generous liquor. The beverage of wine he drank in the festival of the reaping. Though the wine which he quaffed was transparent, it had assumed the form of deadly poison.

We have a slaughtering harvest—the slaughter of the illustrious chief. We raised the song of death—the death of the armed hero—the death of the winged one, whose shield had not been withheld from the spears of battle.† The pre-occupiers fell in the dreadful conflict. Determined was his signal of attack, and decisive the orders which he issued. Without disparagement, he retaliated upon the foe, before the green sod covered the grave of the great and blessed hero.

Z

* Eiddin, he who extorts property or possession—an epithet applied to the usurper Vortigern, in whose court Vortimer received a poisoned cup, by the contrivance of Rowena.

† The Bard alludes to the actions of Vortimer, previous to his fall.

SONG VII.

“ TEITHI AMGANT.”—p. 4.

In this Place, there is a Chasm in the Original. Its Extent is not known. The following Enumeration must be referred to the Middle of the fifth Century, when the Saxons served as mercenary Troops under Vortigern.

THE complement of the borders were three moving bands—five battalions of five hundred men each—three levies of three hundred each—three hundred warlike knights of Eiddyn,* arrayed in gilded armour—three loricated bands, with three commanders, wearing gold chains—three adventurous knights, with three hundred of equal quality. These three bands, of the same order, were mutually jealous in their bitter and impetuous assaults on the foe—they were equally dreadful in the conflict: they would strike a lion flat as lead. Gold had collected all these for warfare.†

There came also three princes of the land, who were native Britons—Cinric and Cenon, of the stock of Aeron,‡ to oppose the ashen spears of the men who dropped into

* Vortigern, as above. It appears that this bloody usurper, who owed his elevation to the murder of his lawful sovereign, and the violence of a party, was diffident of the native Britons, and kept a body-guard of three hundred Saxon horse.

† It seems by this paragraph, that the Saxon mercenaries of Vortigern amounted to about 5000.

‡ Aeron, the Splendid one, or the Queen of Brightness; a name of one of the great luminaries, venerated by the superstitious Britons.

Dëira.* And there came from amongst the Britons, a man who was better than Cenon—even he who proved a serpent to the sullen foes. †

SONG VIII.

“ YVEIS Y WÎN A MED.—p. 4.

The Bard resumes the Subject of the disastrous Feast.

I DRANK of the wine and the mead of the water-dweller, with the huge amber beads. ‡ In the assembly of social men, it was his glory to make food for eagles. When he hastened to rouse at once his fell associates—before he gave the signal § at the early dawn, he left the shields || of split wood at a distance—short-tearing weapons ¶ (he knew) would cut their way.

Before the assault, the points of sprigs had been broken **

Z 2

* That is, the Picts.

† The third and principal hero, who is described, and not named, was probably Eidiol, the Bard's peculiar favourite.

‡ Hengist, with his wreath of amber round his temples.—See song 2.

§ “ Now, with your seaxes!”—The signal which Hengist had previously agreed upon with his assassins.

|| This particular of the plot has been already noticed.

¶ The seax had a sharp edge on one side; but the other side was frequently cut into teeth, like a saw. Sammes, p. 413.

 The breaking of sprigs, so frequently mentioned by the Bards, describes the practice of sortilege. It seems, from this passage, that the diviner, either from his lots, or private conjecture, had conceived some presentiment of the event.

by the son of Semno, the Diviner, who knew, that he who had sold his life would cut with sharp blades. He should have declared this openly, then he would have been slain with pointed weapons.

Notwithstanding his friendly covenant,* he was meditating a convenient attack. He had boasted of the carcasses of brave and powerful men, whom he would pierce in the presence of Gwynedd.†

“ I drank of the wine and the mead of the water-dweller, and because I had drunk, I made a stroke with a small piercing blade.” ‡—“ It was not thy excess of drinking which emboldened the fell chief: when every one made a stroke, thou didst the same. But when the issue comes, it would have been well for thee not to have offended: the present rewarder of your deed§ has displayed a mighty and dreadful arm.”

* Hengist's proposal of a friendly meeting, for the ostensible purpose of settling all disputes.

† That is, Vortigern, Lord of Gwynedd, or North Wales. Golyddan, a Bard of the seventh century, emphatically styles him Gurtheyrn Gwynedd.—W. Archaiol, p. 156.

‡ This is the apology of a Saxon individual, for his atrocious conduct at the feast: to which the indignant Briton replies—“ It was not thy excess,” &c.

§ Eidiol, or Ambrosius, who retaliated upon the Saxons by the death of Hengist.

SONG IX.

“ GWYR A AETH GATTRAETH.”—p. 4.

The Bard, pursuing his Subject, openly charges Vortigern as an Accomplice in Hengist's Plot.

THE heroes who went to Cattræth were renowned. Wine and mead, from golden cups, was their liquor in the year when we accepted of the dignified man who had been set aside.* Three, and three score, and three hundred were they, wearing gold chains.† Of those who hastened to the excess of liquor, three only escaped from the confident stabbing; namely, the two war dogs of Aeron, and our destined governor, ‡ and myself, through my streams of blood—the reward of my candid song.

O my friend! O thou who truly condolest with me! We should not have been beaten, but for the instigation of the sovereign, who was twice elevated. § We should not have been singled out in the court of the mead feast. It was he

* Blwyddyn yn erbyn urddyn dëawd—

The year when Vortigern, who had been deposed for his attachment to the Saxons, was re-elected to the sovereignty, after the death of Vortimer.

† “ Above three hundred of the British nobility, the most eminent for their “ talents in the council, or in the field, perished in this bloody carousal.”

Warrington, p. 59, with his numerous authorities.

‡ Eidiol, or Ambrosius.—It is clear to me, that under these two names, we are to contemplate but one historical character. Ambrosius had, therefore, already returned from Armorica, either during the reign of Vortimer, or upon the faith of this friendly meeting. As this prince was a peculiar object of Vortigern's jealousy, his flattering appointment, as governor of the feast, may have been made for the purpose of securing his attendance amongst the destined victims.

§ Vortigern, who had been deposed, and re-elected by his faction. The Bard openly charges this infatuated prince with the odium of the massacre.

who made the proscription, in behalf of his convenient friend. Base is he in the field, who is base to his own relatives.* The man of Gododin reports, that after the gashing assault, there was none found more ardent than Llywy.†

SONG X.

“ ARF AGCYNNULL.”—p. 4.

This little Dirge may be supposed to have been chaunted over the obtruncated Body of Hengist, when he was taken at the Battle of CAER Conan,§ and beheaded by the Command of Eidiol, or Ambrosius, the Prince who succeeded Vortigern as King of the Britons.

HE who now supports no arm, who presents a lacerated form, deprived of motion, has with energy pervaded the land, through the great multitude of the Lœgrian tribes,

His shields were extended on the sea coast—his shields, in the battle of pikes. He caused a destruction of men, and multiplied widowed matrons before his death. O vehement son of Hoewgi,§ with thy spears didst thou make an effusion of blood!

* Vortigern had made his way to the throne by the base murder of his cousin Constans.—Warrington, p. 39. This paragraph records a more shocking instance of his baseness.

† The British Proserpine—here she represents the whole community of Bards—her votaries. See song 25.

‡ See Gibson's Camden Col. 317. Warrington and his authorities, p. 64.

§ Hengist's father, by the Saxons called Wetgisse.

SONG XI.

“ARWR Y DWY YSGWYD.”—p. 5.

This Song refers to the Actions of Eidiol, or Ambrosius, subsequent to the Massacre of the British Nobles.*

THE hero of the two shields—winged is his variegated van. It is like the velocity of warlike steeds. In Aervre (the mount of slaughter) there was a din—there was fire! Impetuous were his spears, as the rays of the blazing sun. There was food for ravens—there did the raven triumph!

And before the foe was left at large by the eagle's allurer, who delighted in the course, there was scattering on his flanks, and in his front the overwhelming billow! The Bards of the land will judge respecting men of valour.

His counsels were not divulged to slaves.

* The English historians, the Triads, and the chronicles of Tysilio and Geofry of Monmouth, represent this prince as having singly attacked the Saxons, and slain an incredible number of them with a pole.

The poems of Aneurin and Cuhelyn reconcile the report of his actions with probability. Having some suspicion of treachery, he takes his station as governor of the feast, and consequently is not involved in the ranks. Upon the first assault, he extends his shaft between the adverse parties, and gives the alarm to the numerous disciples of the Bards, who were celebrating the festivity of May-day, and to the populace, whom the solemnity had convened. Some of this multitude parry off the Saxons with the long poles which were used in the procession, whilst others set fire to the temporary buildings about the Cursus, and seize the arms which had been there deposited.

It was Hengist's plan, immediately after the massacre, to burst into the temple, and plunder its treasures: but his Saxons, being half intoxicated, and only armed with their corslets and short daggers, were thrown into confusion by this subitaneous host of Britons, and by the surrounding flames; so that after some loss, they were compelled to retreat, and, for the present, to postpone the completion of their design.

Devourers were his spears in the hands of heroes. And, before the deed of the lurkers covered him in the grave,* he was a man who had energy in his commands. Buddvan (the horn of victory), the son of the bold Bleiddvan (lofty wolf), washed his armour with gore.

Injurious, most injurious would it be, to neglect the memorial of him, who left not an open gap for cowardice: whose court was not deserted by the beneficent Bards of Britain, upon the calends of January. It was his resolution, that strangers should not plow his land, though it lay waste. Indignantly did he resent the stratagem of the great Dragon,† who was a leader in the field of blood, after the fatal wine had been quaffed by Gwenabwy‡ (the fair corpse), the son of the Lady—the warrior of Galltraeth.§

* Or, before he was buried, after those who laid a plot for his life, had accomplished their design. This obscure sentence alludes to the manner of Ambrosius' death. Eppa, a Saxon physician, treacherously poisoned him, by the instigation of Pascens, the son of Vortigern.

See Warrington, and his authorities, p. 65, 66.

† Hengist, who slaughtered the British nobles, and wasted the country, after the death of Vortimer, who had fought at Galltraeth.

‡ Vortimer, who was made a corpse, or poisoned, by the contrivance of his step-mother, Rowena.

§ Galltraeth, the Gallic strand, or shore of the Gallic sea. The Bard describes the battle of Galltraeth, song 14, and ascribes the massacre to the resentment of the Saxons, for the victory which the Britons had obtained in that engagement. Hence it appears, that this was Vortimer's victory, recorded by Nennius, Ad Lapidem Tituli, supra ripam Gallici maris, where the Saxons were entirely beaten off British ground, and compelled to fly to their ships. Gibson's Camden Col. 243.

Llech Titlu, or Lapis Tituli, is substituted for Galltraeth in another passage of the Gododin.

SONG XII.

“BU GWÎR MAL Y MEAD Y GATHLEU.”—p. 5.

This Song describes the Conduct of Eidiol at the Instant of the Massacre, and furnishes some Hints of his subsequent Actions.

TRUE it was, as the songs* report. No steeds overtook Marchleu † (the splendid knight). The governor extended his spear, before the swordsman, ‡ in his thick strewed path. Being educated amongst the sacred mounts, he supported his mystic mother: and severe was the stroke of his protecting blade. A spear, of quartered ash, did he extend from his hand, over the STONE CELL OF THE SACRED FIRE, § whilst the corn-stacks were made to puff out with smoke, by those who had cut with the blade armfuls of furze. || Then, as when a reaping comes in doubtful weather, did the splendid knight cause the blood to flow.

From the Southern regions did he send Issac, ¶ whose

* The Bard quotes the authority of songs which had been composed upon the occasion.

† Marchleu and the governor, refer to Eidiol: for the action described, is that which is expressly and exclusively ascribed to that hero.

‡ The Saxon.

§ These are important hints upon the subject of the Bardic temple.

|| In subsequent passages, the Bard expressly describes Eidiol as involving the Saxons in flames.

¶ A corrupt orthography for Esca—“The British prince (Ambrosius) then laid siege to the city of York, in which place Octa, the son of Hengist, and Esca, his brother, had taken refuge; but these chiefs were soon obliged to surrender, upon condition that they and the Saxon soldiers should retire into the country, near Scotland.”—Warrington, p. 64.

conduct had been like the inconstant sea: he was full of modesty and gentleness, whilst he regaled himself with mead; but he would possess a territory, from the rampart of Ofer, to the point of Maddeu—then the savage was glutted with carnage, the scatterer with desolation. On the heads of mothers did his sword resound!

Our hero was a Murgreid (mighty spirit)—praise be to him, the son of Gwyddneu!*

SONG XIII.

“ CAREDIG CARADWY E GLOD.—p. 5.

We are here presented with a striking Contrast, in the Characters of two Heroes, who fell at the fatal Feast. The former was, probably, Caredig, the Son of Cunedda, who possessed a District in Cardiganshire, which, from him, was called Caredigiawn, whence the English name of the County. The second seems to have been Caradog with the brawny Arm, a celebrated Cornish Prince of the fifth Century.

CAREDIG—lovely is his fame! He protects and guards his appointed spot. Calm is he, and gentle, before he comes into the field. Does he give battle! He is brave with discretion. The friend of harmonious song—may he arrive in the celestial region, and recognise his home!

* The Hydranos of the British mysteries.—See the third section of this Essay. Eidiol, or Ambrosius, was his mystical son, or an adept in the Bardic mysteries.

Caredig, the amiable chief, leading in the tumultuous battle, with his golden shield, he marshalled his camp. Lances are darted and shivered into splinters, and penetrating is the stroke of the unrelenting sword. Like a hero, he still maintains his post. Before he was laid on the earth—before the afflictive shock, he had fulfilled his duty in guarding his station. May he find a complete reception with the Trinity, in perfect unity!*

When Caradoc rushed into battle, like a wild boar, he cut his way, and burst forward. In the mangling fight, he was the BULL of the host. The wild dogs were allured by the motion of his hand. For this, I have the testimony of Ewein, the son of Eulat, and Gurien, and Gwyn, and Guriat. But though, from Galltraeth, from the mangling fight, and from Bryn Hydwn, he returned safe,† yet after the clear mead was put into his hand, the hero saw his father no more.

SONG XIV.

“GWYR A GRYSSIASANT.”—p. 6.

The Bard commemorates several of the Nobles who had been slain at the Feast, and celebrates the Heroism which they had displayed in the Battle of Galltraeth.

THE heroes who hastened to the feast, had moved forth

* From this single passage, it appears that, amongst all his heathenish mythology, the Bard acknowledged some genuine tenets of Christianity.

† He had returned in safety from the wars of Vortimer; but he did not escape from the fatal banquet.

unanimously, even the short-lived heroes who were intoxicated over the clarified mead, the retinue of the mountain chief—men who had been illustrious in the hour of trial.

As the price of their mead in the banquet, their lives were paid by Caradoc and Madoc, Pyll and Ieuan, Peredur with steel arms, Gwawrddur and Aeddan, who had escaped from the tumultuous fight with a broken shield. Though they had slain the foe, they also were slain: none of them returned to their peaceful home.

The heroes who hastened to the feast, were entertained together on that year,* over the mead of the great designers.† Those deplorable wretches! how doleful their commemoration! the bane of the land to which they had returned!‡ By mothers they were not nursed! How lasting the resentment and the grief they occasioned! After men had acted bravely—at the moment when they were regaling with mead, the dank floor of Gododin§ receives our vigorous heroes. This was occasioned by the choice liquor of the mountain chief, and the resentment of the victory which they had purchased at Galltraeth.||

These men had gone to Galltraeth to battle, as heroes,

* The year of Vortigern's re-elevation to the sovereignty. See before.

† Vortigern and the Saxons.

‡ The Saxons had been utterly expelled by Vortimer; and again, they returned to Britain upon the restoration of Vortigern.

§ Here Gododin is evidently a name of the great sanctuary, where the massacre was perpetrated.

|| Vortimer's last victory, supra ripam Gallici maris, was the great occasion of Hengist's resentment. The Bard now proceeds to describe the bravery which his heroes had displayed in that decisive action.

with the force of warlike steeds, and red armour and shields, and uplifted spears, and sharp lances, and glittering mail, and swords.—They had excelled—they had penetrated through the host—before their blades five battalions had fallen. The lofty Rhuvawn* had given gold to the altar; and to the Bard, munificent, honorary rewards.

SONG XV.

“ NY WNAETHPWYD NEUADD.”—p. 6.

The Bard speaks of the great Temple, in the Precincts of which the fatal Banquet was celebrated. He recites the heroic Acts of Eidiol, or Ambrosius, who is described by a Variety of Epithets; and touches upon some Particulars of the Retaliation of the Britons, at the Battle of Maes Beli.

A STRUCTURE† was not formed so eminently perfect, so great, so magnificent, for the conflict of swords.

In the place where Morien merited the sacred fire, it cannot be denied that corpses were seen, by the wearer of scaly mail,‡ who was harnessed, and armed with a piercing weapon, but covered with the skin of a beast. His sword resounded upon the head of the chief singer of NÖE and ESEYE,* at the great stone fence of their common sanctuary.—Never more did the child of Teithan move.

* Rhuvawn, the same as Elphin, the Solar Divinity, or his priest.

† The account of the great temple, in this song, deserves the attention of the antiquary. In the passage before us, we are told that it was not made for strife—being the sanctuary of the pacific Bards and Druids.—Here, also, was the cell of the sacred fire, mentioned in a preceding paragraph.

‡ Hengist, who began his outrage, by killing the Bard.

This hall would not have been made so impregnable, had not Morien† been equal to Caradoc. He did not retreat with sorrow towards Mynawc.‡—Enraged is he, and fiercer than the son of Bedrawc.§ Fell is the hand of the knight: in flames he involves the retreating foe.

Terrible is the shout of the city,|| to the timid train, who were scattered before the army of Gododin. From the inclosure of fire, precipitately they fled. In the day of their wrath, they became nimble. They shrunk from their pur-

* Mr. Bryant has demonstrated, that Saturn and Rhea, Osiris and Isis, &c. implied the patriarch Noah, and the Genius of the Ark: with these, I have identified the Dwyean and Dwyvach; Hu and Ked; Tegid and Ceridwen, &c. of the Britons.

Nöe is here introduced by his proper name; but I do not infer from hence, that this name had been preserved by the Pagan Britons. The sacred writings were known in the days of Aneurin: and that Bard, or some one before him, had sufficient discernment to perceive, that his Hu, Tegid, or Dwyvan, was originally the same person as the Nöe of Scripture history.

Eseye was certainly the same character as Isis: and Teithan must be identified with the Greek Titan, or the Sun, who is called Titin, in the Hiberno-Celtic. The Bard, as usual, connects his Arkite superstition with Sabian idolatry.

† A name of the same deified person, but transferred to his priest, Eidiol, as it is evident from the action ascribed to him.

‡ The sovereign—Fortigern, who is elsewhere styled Mynawc Mäon, sovereign of the natives.

§ Bedwyr, the son of Bedrawc, a fabulous hero.

|| The community of Bards, who probably resided in booths, within the outward vallum of the temple.

pose*. Did they merit their horns of mead—the slaves of the mountain chief!†

No hall was made so immoveable as this. As for Cynon‡ of the gentle breast, the governor of the feast, he sat not inactive upon his throne. Those whom he pierced were not pierced again. Keen was the point of his lance. Through the painted corslet did the warrior penetrate. Before his resentment, fleet were the hostile steeds. In the day of wrath, the indignant stroke was returned by the blade of Cynon, when he rushed forth with the early dawn.

Heavy was the stroke which had fallen in the first assault;§ but he|| who administered the liquor, put an end to their outrage. Effectual was his valour, in behalf of Elphin.¶ His spear pushes the chiefs, who had made war in their merriment.—The pinnacle of renown is the radiant bull of battle!

Heavy was the stroke which had fallen in the first assault, as a reward for the mead and wine, which were given

* That is, their design of plundering the temple, which appears, upon this occasion, to have been richly furnished and decorated.

† The Saxons, who had been the mercenaries and the body guard of Vortigern, lord of the mountainous Venedotia. Golyddan calls them Cychinyu Gwrtheyrn Gwynedd, the boatmen of Vortigern of Gwynedd.

‡ “The Prince”—his office and his action prove, that the title must here be referred to Eidiol.

§ The sudden attack of Hengist's assassins.

|| Eidiol, the governor of the feast.

¶ The mystical son of Gwyddnaw—the Solar Divinity.—See Section 3:

 Throughout the Gododin, this singular title implies Eidiol, or Ambrosius, as the priest and representative of Hu, Nöe, or Beli, of whom the bull was the favourite symbol.

in the court; but boldly did HIS weapon interpose between the two ranks. The pinnacle of renown is the radiant bull of battle.

Those who made the heavy stroke for the fair treasures, had their host turned aside with trailing shields—those shields, which were shivered before the herds of the roaring BELI.*

From the bloody field, the monster hastens within the fence.† To us, a grey-headed man arrives—his chief counsellor—with the picture of the prancing steed, bearing a sacred message from the chief with the golden chain—the boar, who had made a compact in the front of the course—the great plotter.

How just was the shout of refusal, which burst forth!

* This paragraph alludes to the battle of Maes Beli, near Caer Conan, in Yorkshire, where Ambrosius (Eidiol) routed Hengist and his Saxons, in the year 481, and put them to a disorderly flight.—See Gibson's Camden, Col. 847—Warrington, p. 63.

As the Bard denominates the leader a bull of battle, so his forces were the herds of the roaring Beli. This last name, though conferred upon several princes, was properly a title of the Solar Divinity, whose sanctuary the Saxons had profaned. From this victory obtained by his votaries, the field of battle may have acquired the name of Maes Beli, the field of Beli.

† That is, within the fortress of Caer Conan, which the Bard describes in a subsequent passage. as situated upon the high lands of the Done.

“The Done runs within view of Connisborow, an old castle, called in British, “Caer Conan, and situated upon a rock; whither (at the battle of Maisbelly, “when Aurelius Ambrosius routed the Saxons, and put them to a disorderly “flight) Hengist, their general, retired, to secure himself; and a few days “after, took the field against the Britons, who pursued him, and with whom he “engaged a second time, which proved fatal, both to himself and his army. “For the Britons cut off many of them, and taking him prisoner, beheaded “him.”—Camden. Ibid.

It appears by this paragraph of Aneurin, that previous to the last desperate engagement, Hengist had sent to the British commander a flag of truce, bearing his own arms; which consisted of a white prancing horse, upon a red field.

Verstegan, p. 151.

Again, we are conjured by heaven, that he might be received into protection.

“ Let him enjoy the kindness which he displayed in his “ stabbing assault! The warriors, since the time of his fa“ mous plot, have fought with one design--that his host “ might press the ground!”

SONG XVI.

“ AM DRYNNI DRYLAW DRYLEN.”—p. 7.

The Death of the Bard at the Feast—the Resentment and Revenge of Eidiol and the Britons.

FOR the piercing of the skilful and most learned man ; for the fair corpse which fell upon the sod ; for the cutting of his hair from his head ; round the æthereal (temple)* of the eagle of Gwydion, † Gwyddhwch ‡ turned his protecting spear—the image of the master whom he adored.

A A

* Awyr, the sky, in this passage, and Wybr, which has the same import, in the works of Taliesin, seems to imply a building, which, like Stonehenge, and other British temples, is open to the sky. Thus Taliesin—“ A holy sanctuary there is on the wide lake, a city not protected with walls, the sea surrounds it. Demaudest thou, O Britain, to what this can be meetly applied ! Before the lake of the son of Erbin, let thy ox be stationed—there, where there has been a retinue, and in the second place, a procession, and an eagle aloft in the sky, and the path of Grawwyn” (Apollo). Append. No. 2.

So again ; he mentions the Druid of Wybr Geirwnydd, the athereal (temple) of Geirwnydd.—Append. No. 12.

† The same as Gwydion, the Hermes of the Britons.

‡ The wild boar—an epithet applied to Eidiol.

Morien* defended the blessed sanctuary—the basis, and chief place of distribution of the source of energy, of the most powerful, and the most ancient.†—She is transpierced! Though Bradwen‡ (the treacherous dame) was a damsel, she fell—the just expiation for Gwenabwy (the fair corpse) the son of Gwen (the lady).

For the piercing of the skilful, most learned man, the minister§ bore a shield in the action. With energy, his sword descends on the pate. In Loegria, his stern ones cut their way before the prince. He who handles the wolf's neck, without a cudgel in his hand, will have a rent in his garment.

In the conflict of wrath and resentment, the treacherous lady perished—she did not escape.

* A title of the god, and hence of his priest—as before.

† I must leave it to the antiquaries, to ascertain these divinities, by their attributes.

‡ Rowena, who poisoned Vortimer, her step-son—thence called, the fair corpse, the son of the lady.

§ Eidiol, who, though he seems to have been a much better Druid than Christian, held the rank of bishop, in the apostate church of the Britons.

SONG XVII.

“ EUR AR VUR CAER.”—p. 7.

This Part of the Gododin is badly preserved. The various Readings exceed the Number of Lines; yet they are insufficient to make out the Measure or the Construction. The Passage seems, however, to record a Taunt upon the Conduct of our Bard, in an Affair where he was vested with the Command. The following is the best Sense which I can pick out of the Heap of Fragments.

THE gold, without the city walls, was dissipated. The ardent warrior was calling—“ Towards the city!” But there, a meek man was stationed, with his shouts, to keep aloof the wandering birds.

Syll of Vireun reports, in addition, that from the circumstance of the Llwy (river?) the army was led round the flood, so that, at the hour of dawn, the officers did not act in concert.—

When thou, O toiler of panegyric, wast protecting the ear of corn on the height, (if ravagers may be deemed worthy of credit) there was free access to Din Drei: there was wealth for him who had courage to fetch it: there was a city for the army that should have resolution to enter.

The Bard replies—

Felicity is not claimed where success has been wanting.

Though there be a hundred men in one house—I know the cares in which I am involved—the chief of the men must defray the charge.

SONG XVIII.

“NYT WYF VYNAWC BLÎN.”—p. 7.

The Bard, who is a Prisoner of War, alludes to the preceding Sarcasm, and declares the Circumstances under which his Songs were composed.

I AM not violent nor querimonious: I will not avenge myself on the petulant; nor will I laugh in derision. This particle* shall drop under foot, where my limbs are inflamed, in the subterraneous house, by the iron chain, which passes over my two knees.

Yet, of the mead, and of the horn, and of the assembly of Cattræth, I, Aneurin, will sing, what is known to Taliesin, who imparts to me his thoughts: and thus, a sonnet of the Gododin is finished, before the dawn of day†.

* This contemptible scoff.

† From this passage, as well as from the general tenor of the work, it is evident that the Gododin was not undertaken as one single poem, with a regular and connected design.

SONG XIX.

“GOROLED GOGLEDD GWR AE GORUC.”—p. 8.

In the last Song, we found Aneurin amusing the tedious Nights of his Imprisonment, with the Composition of his Sonnets. But now he has, for some Time, been set at large by a Son of Llywarch. A considerable Interval must, therefore, have elapsed, since the Date of the preceding Composition.*

The Bard begins with a Tribute of Gratitude to his Benefactor; and then passes, with some Address, to the Subject of the fatal Feast. He enumerates the Fields where the British Warriors had fought, under Vortimer; but the Paragraph which contains this Catalogue is very imperfect, and the Sense is collected, with some Difficulty, out of a Mass of various Readings. The Song concludes with some Allusions to the Retaliation of the Britons in subsequent Battles,

THE chief renown of the North † has a hero acquired,

* Generally supposed to have been Llywarch Hên, the celebrated Bard. But here a difficulty presents itself. Llywarch is the reputed author of an Elegy upon the death of Cadwallon, the son of Cadvan, which happened about the year 646: and it is obvious, that the son of a man who was living in the year 646, could not have liberated Aneurin, who had witnessed the massacre of 472.

I think it probable, that Aneurin's friend was the son of Llywarch Hên; but that Llywarch, who is known to have flourished in the beginning of the sixth century, could not have been the author of the Elegy in question.

The piece was anonymous: but some old copyist thinking it worth preserving, transcribed it into a book which contained some of Llywarch's genuine works—hence it has passed under his name.

† Our author was a Northumbrian Briton, and so was Llywarch Hên.

of gentle disposition—a liberal Lord, who has not been equalled.

Yet earth does not support, nor has mother borne, a warrior so illustrious, when clad in steel. By the force of his bright sword, he protected me; from the horrid, subterraneous prison he brought me forth—from the inclosure of death, from a hostile region. Such is Ceneu, the son of Llywarch, energetic and bold,

He would not have brooked the disparagement of a solemn Bardic meeting,* in the character of a Seneschal, with his vessels full of mead. For deeds of violence, he would have supplied swords; he would have furnished weapons for war: but with his arm he would have supported his guests.

But before the band of Gododin and Bernicia,† booths for horses were prepared in the hall: there was streaming gore, and blood-stained armour, and the long knife ‡ to thrust from the hand. And with speed were they distinguished into tribes, whilst the Lady and her paramour § were stowing their parties, an armed man, and a man unarmed, by turns.||

* Alluding to the "Gorsedd," or solemn Bardic assembly, in which Hengist had perpetrated his atrocious deed.

† The Bard being a Northern Briton, mentions his own countrymen with a patriotic distinction, though they had constituted only a part of the devoted assembly.

‡ The sear, with which Hengist's party were privately armed.

§ Rowena and Vortigern.

|| The Saxons, wearing their corslets, and armed with the dagger; the Britons totally unarmed.

"By the contrivance of Hengist, they were placed with his train, alternately, at the tables, under the pretence of confidence, and of a friendly intercourse with each other."—Warrington, p. 59.

These were not men who would stab and fly. They had been the generous defenders of every region—at Llech Leuca, at the stone of Titleu, at Leudvre, at Llech Levdir, at Gardith, at Tithragon, at Tegvare, in front of Gododin, at Ystre Annon, at the course of Gododin, and at Ragno.* Close by his hand, was that hand which had directed the splendour of battle, the branch of Caerwys, though he had been shattered by a tempestuous season—a tempestuous season, which had favoured the ships of the alien host.

To form a rank before the royal power, we were allured—it was to our ruin! Deeply did they design—sharply did they pierce the whole of our assembly.

But the chief of the projecting shield † has had his van broken, before the bull of battle, ‡ whose enemies tremble in sorrow, since the battle of active tumult at the border of Ban Carw. §

Round the border of Ban Carw, 'the freckled fingers || had broken the sprigs, to know who should be overwhelmed, who should conquer—to know who should be routed, who should triumph.

* The scenes of Vortimer's battles, in which these heroes had distinguished themselves. The paragraph is greatly injured by time, and the present catalogue is collected from the various readings, including those which are inserted in the text. W. Archaiol. p. 13.

† Hengist.

‡ Eidiol, or Ambrosius, as before.

§ Probably, the old name of Maes Beli, before it had obtained a new designation, from the victory of the Britons.

|| Hengist, who is elsewhere called Dywynawl Vrych, the freckled intruder, is here represented as consulting his lots upon the event of the approaching battle.

“ The native is roused—the invader is subdued.” *

In Rhiwdrech, † he who is not bold, will fail of his purpose. Victory is not for him who dreads being overtaken.

SONG XX.

“ NY MAT WANPWYT.”—p. 8.

This little Dialogue may be supposed to have passed between Rowena and a native Briton. It forcibly paints the Feelings of the Times,

ROWENA.

Not meetly was the shield pierced upon the side of the horse ‡—not meetly did the man of the grey stone pillars mount the lofty steed §—dark was his spear.

BRITON.

It was dark: but darker, by far, is thy husband in the cell, || gnawing the jaw of a buck.

* This sentence contains the omen, collected from the lots.

† “ The cliff of superiority, or prevalence.”—This seems to be the name which the Britons gave to the scene of Hengist’s last fatal action, near the rock of Caer Conan, where he was taken and beheaded.

‡ The names of Hengist and Horsa equally imply a horse. One of these commanders had been slain, and the other beaten; it is, therefore, uncertain which of them is here meant.

§ Eidiol, the priest of the great temple, who is represented as seated upon his steed, when he filled the office of Seneschal.

|| Vortigern, who was confined by Hengist after the massacre, till he purchased his liberty by the cession of part of his dominions.

ROWENA.

I hope he enjoys it—may he be supplied with a few jaws!

BRITON (indignantly).

How happily did our Adonis come to his Venus!—
 “ Let the Lady of the sea (says he), let Bradwen only “ come hither, and then (O Hengist!) thou mayest do—
 “ thou mayest kill; thou mayest burn—worse than Morien
 “ thou canst not do.”*

But thou hast regarded neither moderation nor counsel, thou beheader, † with the haughty countenance! Thou, O Venedotian, didst not attend to the great swelling sea of knights, who would give no accommodation to the Saxons.

* A sarcastic repetition of the language supposed to have been addressed by Vortigern to Hengist, when he sued for the hand of Rowena.

† Vortigern, the Venedotian. “Gwrtheyrn Gwynedd,” who had ascended the throne, by causing his cousin Constans to be beheaded in his bed; and afterwards, by overruling the voice of the British council, had invited the Saxons into Britain to support his tottering cause, and to oppose the Picts, whose resentment he had provoked, by imputing to the guards of that nation his own sacrilegious crime.

SONG XXI.

“GODODIN GOMYNAF.”—p. 8.

The Bard, observing the Calamities of his Country, reflects upon the Circumstance of the fatal Banquet, which had deprived the Britons of their best Supporters.

GODODIN! upon thy account, I deplore the dales beyond the ridge of Drum Essyd. A servant,* greedy of wealth, but void of shame, by the counsel of his son,† sets thy heroes on high. Not mean was the place appointed for conference, before the perpetual fire.‡ From twilight to twilight, the sweet liquor is quaffed by the stranger, who glances at the purple.§ He kills the defenceless, but melodious minister|| of the bulwark of battle—his inseparable companion—whose voice was like that of Aneurin.

At once¶ arose the warriors of the chief—In Cattraeth—a noisy and impetuous mob—to pay the reward of the mead in the court, and the beverage of wine.—Between the two ranks a spear was extended by a dignified knight, in

* Hengist, who had been a mercenary captain.

† Vortigern, who had married the daughter of Hengist, and whom the Bard repeatedly stigmatises as the adviser of the plot.

‡ Or the fire of Meithin. We have frequent allusions to the cell of the sacred fire.

§ Hengist, whose ambition aimed at the sovereignty of Britain.

|| The Bard, Owen, whose fate is so often deplored.

¶ Upon Hengist's signal, the Saxons made a sudden and general assault.

 Eidiol, who is styled the bull of battle.

defence of Gododin. The pinnacle of renown is the radiant bull of battle.

At once arose the warriors of the associated King—strangers to the land—their deed shall be proclaimed. The stranger with the gorgeous robe, rolls down our heroes in the place where the Elain (Bards) were in full harmony.* Amongst the weapons of the freckled chief, † thou couldst not have seen the rod. ‡ With the base, the worthy can have no concord. The sea rovers cannot defend their outrageous deed with their steel blades, ready to shed blood.

At once arose the warriors of the associated King—strangers to the land—their deed shall be proclaimed. In close rank, with blades, there was slaughtering; and the man of carnage prevailed over the hero.

The experienced warriors who had assembled, were all assaulted at once with an unanimous stroke. Short were their lives—long is the grief of their friends. Seven times their number of Lœgrians had they slain.§—From this conflict arose the screams of their wives, and many a mother has the tear upon her cheek.

* The precincts of the great Druidical temple.

† Hengist, as before.

‡ The pacific insigne of the Bard—in song 25, it is called the branch.

§ In the wars of Vortimer.

SONG XXII.

“ NY WNAETHPWYD NEUADD.”—p. 9.

The Bard celebrates the Fame of the great Temple, and of Eidiol, who bravely defended it, after the outrageous Assault of the Saxons.

NEVER was a hall formed so complete—nor a lion so generous, in the presence of the lion of the greatest course,* as Cynon of the gentle breast, the most comely Lord.

The fame of the city † extends to the remotest parts—the established inclosure of the band of the harmonious BUDD. ‡

And of all that I have seen, or shall see hereafter, unequalled in his conduct, is the brandisher of arms. Most heroic in energy, with the sharpest blade, he slew the ravagers. Like rushes they fell before his hand. O son of Clydnaw, § of the lasting fame, to thee will I sing a song of praise, without boundary, without end!

If in the banquet of mead and wine, they || sacrificed to

* The sun.—Eidiol, or Cynon (the prince), the chief priest of the temple, is also styled a lion.

† The temple, surrounded by a vallum, which included the dwellings of the Bards.

‡ Victory.—This seems to be a title of Kéd, or Ceridwen, the British Ceres.

§ “ Ship-bearer”—he who carried the sacred ark in the British mysteries.

|| The Saxons.

slaughter the mother of spoliation, the energetic EIDIO I,* also honoured her before the mount, in the presence of the god of victory, the King who rises in light, and ascends the sky.

Whilst the assembled train were accumulating, like a darkening swarm, around him, without the semblance of a retreat, his exerted wisdom planned a defence against the pallid outcasts, with their sharp-pointed weapons.

Before the vigilant son of harmony they fled, upon the awaking of the mother of Rheiddin† (the Radiant), leader of the din.

SONG XXIII.

“ O WINVEITH A MEDDVEITH.”—p. 9.

On the calamitous Consequences of the fatal Banquet.

FROM the drinking of wine and mead, to strife proceeded the mail-clad warriors.‡ No tale of slaughter have I known, which records so complete a destruction, as that of the assembly, who had confidently met before Cattræth.

* The interposing knight, to whom the Bard so often alludes. This is the first time that his name is introduced; but his character is easily distinguished by the identity of the action ascribed to him.

† Apollo, or the sun—by his mother, I think the Bard means Aurora, the dawn: he frequently tells us, that the action took place at the dawn.

‡ The Saxons, who wore their corslets, or coats of mail.

One man alone returned, of the retinue of most deplorable mountain chief.* One alone, out of three hundred, who had hastened to the feast of wine and mead—men renowned in difficulty, prodigal of their lives, who had jovially caroused together in the well-furnished banquet, copiously régaling upon mead and wine.

From the retinue of the mountain chief, ruin has extended to us; and I have lost my chief, and my sincere friends. Of three hundred nobles who hastened to Cattraeth, alas! none have returned, but one man alone.

In the present insurrection, confident was the son of the stranger. Easy was he in his discourse, if he were not jocular—hence the delusive security of Gododin.†

After the wine and mead, he who had been unrestrained, is left motionless upon the course, and the red-stained warrior mounts the steeds of the knight, who had been formidable in the morning.

* Out of three hundred and sixty-three, we are told that three escaped; or, as it is elsewhere expressed, one man out of a hundred: but from this passage it appears, that only one of these pertained to three hundred of the first rank, which composed the more immediate retinue of Vertigern, or the mountain chief.

† Hengist had carefully disguised his sentiments, lest he should excite a premature suspicion of his design.

SONG XXIV.

“ANGOR DEOR DAEN.”—p. 10.

An Invocation to the Sun, in which the Destruction of the Foe is predicted. The Praise of Eidiol and the British Patriots, who retaliated upon the Saxons. Some Account of the religious Ceremonies at the solemn Meeting.

ANGOR, thou producer of good, thou serpent who piercest the sullen ones, thou wilt trample upon those who are clad in strong mail, in the front of the army.

In behalf of thy supplicant wilt thou arise; thou wilt guard him from the spoiler: thou wilt trample the spear-men in the day of battle, in the dank entrenchment, like the mangling dwarf,* whose fury prepared a banquet for birds in the tumultuous fight.

Just art thou named, from thy righteous deed, thou leader, director, and supporter of the course of battle. O Merin,† son of Madien, happy was thy birth!

It is an imperative duty, to sing the complete acquisition of the warriors who, round Cattraeth, made a tumultuous rout. The authors of the bloody confusion were trampled under feet. Trampled were the stern ones, whose mead

* Neddig Nar—an abortion, cut out of the womb of his mother.

† Otherwise, son of Seithenin—Saturn, Noah. The Welsh monks have converted him into a saint.

had mantled in the horns: and the carnage made by the interposers, after the battle had been roused, cannot be related by the cauldron of Kêd,* though it excel in eloquence.

It is an imperative duty, to sing the perfection of renown—the tumult of fire, of thunder and of tempest—the exerted bravery of the knight,† who interposed, the red reaper, whose soul pants for war. The strenuous, but worthless man has he decollated in battle. The multitude of the land shall hear of his deed.

With his shield upon his shoulder, has he poured forth an effusion (of blood) as it were wine out of crystal vessels. He who extorted silver for his mead, has paid gold in return,‡ and Gwaednerth,§ son of the supreme king has had his banquet of wine.

It is an imperative duty to sing the illustrious patriots, who, after the fatal stroke, replenished the stream (of heroism) whose hand satisfied the hunger of the brown eagles, and provided food for the beasts of prey.

Of those who went to Cattræth, wearers of the gold chains, upon the message of the mountain chief, sovereign

* Kibno Kêd—the same as Pair Ceridwen—the Cauldron, or sacred Vase of the British Ceres—figuratively, the Bardic lore.

† Eidiol, or Ambrosius, who, in the year 481, beheded Hengist at Caer Conan.

‡ The meaning is, that the Saxons paid dear for their outrage at the feast.

§ Force of blood—or he who sheds blood by violence, an epithet of the British Mars.

of the natives;* it is manifest there came not to Gododin, in behalf of the Britons, a hero from a distant region, who was better than Cynon.†

It is an imperative duty, to sing the complete associates, the cheerful ones of the ARK of the world.‡ Hu was not without his selection; in the CIRCLE of the world, it was his choice to have Eidiol, the harmonious: for, notwithstanding their gold, their great steeds, and the mead they drank, only one dignified man returned from thence—the president of the structure of the splendid one, the grandson of Enovant.

It is an imperative duty, to sing the illustrious patriots, who came on the message of the mountain chief, sovereign of the natives, and the daughter of the lofty Eudav,§ the same who selected the unarmed, and dressed in purple, those who were destined to be slaughtered.

In the festival of May,|| they celebrated the praise of the holy ones, in the presence of the purifying fire, which was

B B

* Vortigern, the supreme king of the Britons.

† "The prince"—Eidiol or Ambrosius, who had returned from Armorica.

‡ The Arkite mythology of this passage deserves the attention of the curious. The great temple was the ark and the circle of the world. Hu, the patriarch, was the divinity, and Eidiol, his chosen priest—Hu, at the same time, was Aeron, the Arkite—}𐌹𐌺𐌹 or the splendid one—such is the mixture of Arkite and Sabian superstition.

§ From Au—and Tav—the false usurper.—The lady here intended is Rowena, the daughter of Hengist; for we have already seen, that she, in conjunction with her paramour, Vortigern, disposed the ranks at this feast.

|| Meiwyr, the May-men—The meeting took place, at the solemn festival of the Britons, in the beginning of May.—The fire here mentioned is well known to the Irish, by the name of Bealteine. See the word in Shaw's Gaelic and English Dictionary.

made to ascend on high. On the Tuesday, they wore their dark garments—on the Wednesday, they purified their fair attire on the Thursday, they truly performed their due rites (devöed)—on the Friday, the victims were conducted round the circle—on the Saturday, their united exertion was displayed without the circular dance (didwrn)—on the Sunday, the men with red blades were conducted round the circle—on the Monday, was seen the deluge of gore, up to the belt.*

After the toil, the man of Gododin, upon his return before the tents of Madawc, reports but one man in a hundred, who came from thence,

SONG XXV.

“ MOCHDWYREAWC YM MORE.”—p. 10.

This Song contains many Particulars of the fatal Assault ; of the Sanctity of the Bardic Temple, and of Eidiol's Address and Heroism, in defending it.

AT early morn arose the tumult of the gate, before the course.† There was a breach ; but there was a heap, per-

* This passage describes some of the regular ceremonies of the meeting, which, upon the present occasion, unexpectedly closed, with a deplorable massacre.

† The feast was celebrated, and the outrage committed, upon the Cursus, at the distance of half a mile from the temple, and to which one of the avenues leads. Upon this avenue, or perhaps, in the very gate, or passage of the vallum, which surrounds the structure, and which was probably fortified with a strong palisade ; Eidiol kindled a fire to obstruct the irruption of the Saxons, who intended to plunder the temple.

vaded with fire. Like a boar didst thou protect the mount, where was the treasure of the associated ones—the place was stained with the dark gore of hawks.*

Suddenly aroused, in a moment, after kindling the avenue,† before the boundary, and conducting his associates in firm array—in the front of a hundred, he thrusts forwards—“ It was horrid that ye (Saxons)‡ should make a flood of gore in the same merriment, with which ye regaled with mead. Was it brave in you to kill a defenceless§ man, with the cruel and sudden stroke of a sword? How outrageous were it for an enemy to slay a man not equally armed! But he (your chief) has descended, with a sudden and promiscuous stroke.—The skilful chief of song was not to be outraged. To kill him, when he carried the branch, was a violation of privilege. It was a primary law, that Owen should ascend the course—that this branch should whisper before the fierce onset, the

B B 2

* These birds of prey seem to imply the Saxons, though the term is often used, to denote the British princes.

† Aber, any passage or outlet.

‡ This speech is put into the mouth of Eidiol, and evidently addressed to the Saxons.

§ That is, the Bard, who, as we find, was named Owen. He carried the sacred branch, and chanted the pacific songs of Llywy, the British Proserpine. That Owen was invested with the prerogative of a Druid, appears from the striking coincidence of this passage, with the testimony of Diodorus, respecting those ancient priests.—Lib. V. C. 31.

The passage is thus translated by Dr. Henry.

“ No sacred rite was ever performed without a Druid; by whom, as being the favourites of the gods, and depositaries of their counsels, the people offered all their sacrifices, thanksgivings, and prayers; and were perfectly submissive and obedient to their commands. Nay, so great was the veneration in which they were held, that when two hostile armies, inflamed with warlike rage, with swords drawn, and spears extended, were on the point of engaging in battle; at their intervention, they sheathed their swords, and became calm and peaceful.”—Hist. of Great Britain, B. I. Chap. 2.

“ effectual songs, which claimed obedient attention—the “ songs of Llywy,* the assuager of tumult and battle.
 “ Then would the sword retire to the left side; the warrior, “ with his hand, would support the empty corslet, and the “ sovereign, from his treasure chest, would search out the “ precious reward.”

The placid Eidiol felt the heat of the splendid Grannawr,† (Apollo) when the maid (Llywy) was treated with outrage—even she who was supreme in judgment, possessing the steeds with bright trappings, and the transparent shield.

His (Eidiol's) associates join the fray, determined to stand or fall, whilst he, their wasteful leader, conducts the war; even he who loves the native race—the mighty reaper, whose energy stains the green sod with gore,

They sound for steeds—for trappings they sound; whilst over his temples, he binds the defensive band, and the image of death, scatters desolation in the conflict. In the first onset, the lances are couched to the side, and for a light in the course, shrubs blaze upon the spears. Thus fought the musical tribe,‡ for the injury of thy cell, O Kéd, and of the conclave where he resided, who merited the delicious, potent mead.

With the dawn, the ardent hero makes the slaughter

* The British Proserpine, who was symbolized by the Ovum Anguinum, and to whom the mystic branch was sacred.

† Grannawr Gwyn—Taliesin calls him Gran wyn.

‡ The half pagan Bards, who, in that age, constituted the clergy of the Britons.

clash, O fair Kêd,* thou ruler of the Lœgrian tribes; and in his resentment, he punishes the vexatious hirelings†— His renown shall be heard!

SONG XXVI.

“ GWAN ANHON BYD VEDD.”—p. 11.

The Alliteration connects this with the preceding, and the Action is ascribed to the same Person; but these Lines evidently refer to the Vengeance which Eidiol, or Ambrosius, wreaked upon Vortigern; of which we have some further Account in Song 30.

HE assaults the infamous contriver of ruin, at the mead banquet—the same who grasped the violent spear of Gwynedd—the bull of the host, who had transgressed the laws of princely battle: though he had kindled the land before his fall, the superior band of Gododin provided his grave.

Involved in vapours,‡ is he that was accustomed to armies. The sovereign, but bitter-handed commander of the

* The British Ceres, the same as Ceridwen, the mother of Llywy, or Creirwy.

† Or slaves of the Venedotian—a phrase by which the Bard reproaches the Saxons.

‡ Vortigern's castle, in North Wales, was burnt to the ground by Ambrosius, and the unfortunate king perished in the flames.—Warrington, p. 62.

forces, was endowed with talents, but vehement and arrogant. In the feast, he was not harsh to his associates, who might remove, and possess his valuable treasures; but in no respect was he a benefactor to his country.

SONG XXVII.

“ AN GELWIR ! ”—p. 11.

*The Wars of the Britons and Saxons after the Massacre.
The Bravery of Eidiol or Ambrosius, with some Particulars of his Conduct at the Moment of the fatal Catastrophe.*

WE are called! The sea and the borders are in conflict. Spears are mutually rushing—spears of those whom we cherished. There is need of sharp weapons. Gashing is the sword. The Seaxes, in wild uproar, are descending on the pate. Before the hostile band, flaming in steel, there is a prosperous leader, even he who supported the steeds and the bloody harness,* on the red-stained Cattræth. The foremost shaft in the host is held by the consumer of towns, the mighty dog of slaughter, at the supreme mount.†

We are called! To the bright glory of conflict, led on by the hand of the meritorious, the iron-clad chief, the

* Alluding probably to the arms of Hengist, namely, a prancing steed, upon a red field, which was displayed at the fatal banquet.

† The great temple, or British Mount of Judicature, when the nobles were slain by Hengist.

sovereign, who is the theme of the *Gododin--the sovereign, who deplures our divisions.

Before Eidiol,† the energetic, there is a flame; it will not be blown aside. Men of approved worth has he stationed in command. The firm covering guard has he placed in the van.

He it was, who vigorously descended upon the scattered foe. When the cry arose, he supported the main weight. Of the retinue of the mountain chief, none escaped but those defenceless ones, whom his arm protected.

By the management of the sea rovers, there was not a shield amongst them.‡ They insisted upon a clear space to light the area. He§ who carried the blue gleaming blade, put back his hand, whilst our chief priest|| was leaning upon a priest's long staff, seated upon a grey steed, as governor of the feast. Beneath the blade,¶ there was a dreadful fall of slaughter. Nor from the conflict did he fly—

* Eidiol or Ambrosius—the undoubted hero of the Gododin.

† The original has Eidyn, the living one; but the two next paragraphs clearly evince, that Eidiol is the person intended.

‡ Though shields were not offensive arms, yet their admission into the assembly, might have defeated the murderous purpose of Hengist: a reason was therefore devised, why they should be excluded. It was pretended that their wide orbs would obstruct the light of the torches, during the nightly carousal.—The Saxon corslets were not liable to the same objection.

§ Hengist.

|| Eidiol—The Britons and the Germans had great respect for their horses; but the introducing of the governor of the feast upon his steed, was a whimsical rite, whether considered as religious or military.

¶ Of Hengist and his Saxons.

 Eidiol, as above.

the spearman, mounted upon the steed—he who did the honours of the banquet of delicious, potent mead.

I beheld a spectacle* from the high land of the Done, when they were descending with the sacrifice round the omen fire. I saw what was usual, in a town closely shut up; and disorderly men were pierced with agony.—I saw men in complete order, approaching with a shout, and carrying the head of the freckled intruder.†—May the ravens devour it!

SONG XXVIII.

“ MAT MUDIG.”—p. 12.

Sequel of the Acts of Ambrosius, after the Fall of Hengist, with a Hint respecting the Manner of his Death.

THE light and bleached bones of the aliens are removed by the fortunate chief: his blue banners are displayed: whilst the foe ranges the sea, Gwrawl (Aurelius) is in the watery region, with a mighty host. The magnanimous triumphs: disarmed is the feeble. It was his primary order, to make a descent, before the ships of the royal force, with propulsive strokes, in the face of blood, and of the land.

I will love thy victorious throne, which teemed with

* The death and decollation of Hengist at Caer Conan, upon the bank of the Done.—Gibson's Camden, Col. 847.

† Dyvynawl Vrych—Hengist, as above.

strains of harmony, thou president of the structure of the splendid one, with the luminous speech. I could wish to have fallen the first in Cattraeth, as the price of the mead and wine in the court—I could wish it for him who never disgraced the sword, rather than that he should be slain with the pale potion.*—I could wish it for the son of fame, who sustained the bloody fight, and made his sword descend upon the violent. Can a tale of valour be recorded before Gododin, in which the son of Ceidiaw† has not his fame, as a warlike hero!

SONG XXIX.

“TRUAN YW GENNYF.”—p. 12.

The Bard takes a general Retrospect of the Affairs of Britain, from the Time of Vortimer, to the Beginning of the Sixth Century.

WITH sorrow I reflect, that after our toils, we suffer the pang of death through indiscretion. And again, with pain and sorrow I observe, that our men are falling, from the highest to the lowest, breathing the lengthened sigh, and loaded with obloquy. (We are going) after those men who extended the fame of our land—Rhuvaw'n and Gwgaw'n, Gwyn and Gwylged, men most valiant, most magnanimous and firm

* Ambrosius was poisoned by Eppa, a Saxon, acting in the character of a physician.—Warrington, p. 66.

† The Preserver—the mystical parent of our hero, as an adept in the mysteries of Bardism.

in the hour of trial. May their souls obtain—now their toils have ceased—a reception in the heavenly region—a secure dwelling!

He who, through a lake of gore, repelled the slavish chain*—he who, like a hero, cut down those foes, who would not retreat to the clear expanse; even he, together with the spear, brought forth the crystal cup—with mead, placed before the princes, he encouraged the army. The greatness of his counsels a multitude cannot express. The coward was not suffered to hesitate. Before the velocity of his great designs, together with the sharpened blades, he took care to provide flags of message, the means of supporting his army, a supply of penetrating weapons, and a strong van-guard, with a menacing front.

In the day of strenuous exertion, in the gallant conflict, these displayed their valour; but after the intoxication, in the banquet of mead, there has been no complete deliverance.†

Our president at the festival‡ was prosperous for a season: for it will be recorded, that their impulse was broken, by men and steeds. But fixed was the decree of fate, when they arrived—that vexatious multitude—with sorrow, I recount their bands—eleven complete battalions.—Now there is precipitate flight, and lamentation upon the road.

* Vortimer, who, after a series of bloody battles, drove the Saxons out of Britain.

† The Saxons never evacuated the island, after the massacre of the British nobility.

‡ Eidiol or Ambrosius.

Dolefully do I deplore, what I greatly loved—the Celtic glory! And the men of Argoed,* how wofully did they associate, to their own overwhelming, with the wretch, who utterly ruined the prosperity of the country, for the benefit of his chiefs, when upon timbers of rude workmanship, at the deluge of affliction, they caroused together at the feast.† He it was who had robbed us upon the fair Thanet,‡ and with the white and fresh hide.§

Thou, O Geraint,|| didst raise a shout before the South : on the shield didst thou strike a signal, to repair to the white water.

Thou chief of the spear, thou, O gentle chief, didst render our youth attached to the glory of the sea—even thou didst render them, O Geraint, a generous commander wast thou !

Instantaneously his fame reaches the harbours. At once, the anchors are weighed. Like liberated eagles were his alert warriors—men, who with brilliant zeal would support the battle, and scud with a velocity, outstripping the fleetest

* The Northern Britons, who made a league with Hengist.

† The feast, in which Hengist slew the nobles.

‡ Danad loyw—Vortigern, upon Hengist's first arrival, allotted the Isle of Thanet for the place of his residence.—Warrington, with his authorities, p. 44.

§ Hengist desired of Vortigern, a grant of as much British ground as he could compass about, with a bull's hide. Having obtained this moderate request, he cut a large bull's hide into small thongs, with which he compassed a considerable tract, where he founded a castle, called from that circumstance, Thong Castle.—Camden (Col. 569) places it in Lincolnshire; but Verstegan, p. 133, says it stood near Sydingcorn in Kent.

|| Geraint, son of Erbin, a prince of the Britons of Devon, and the commander of a British fleet, in the close of the fifth, and beginning of the sixth century.

coursers. If the battle paused, the wine flowed from the capacious vessel. Before he reached the grassy tomb, or his locks became hoary with age, he was a hero, who honoured the mead banquet with the generous bowl.

SONG XXX.

“DIHENYDD I BOB LLAWR LLANWET.”—p. 13 & 14.

An Elegy upon the Death of Vortigern—the Original is obscure, and badly preserved.

HE who brought the influx of ruin upon every region—like a man indifferent to all events—strikes the signal upon his shield. At length, the strenuous man obtained a retreat in Rhyvoniawg,* like the nest of those who are buried, and set apart from society. With his warlike steeds and gory arms, he deems it fortunate to remain unmolested.

But he who had afflicted great and courageous men, and with his sword, had severely slaughtered in the fight, receives a woful warning of conflict, from him who had prepared a hundred songs for the festival.†

By the two sons of Urvei was he assaulted; he was assaulted by those two exulting boars, who were of the same parentage as a sovereign prince, and a holy maid. And though the lord of Gwynedd was a dignified sovereign, and the blood (relation) of Cilydd, our deliverer;* yet before the turf was laid upon the face of the magnanimous, but falling prince, he was wisely assailed with battle, and divested of fame and privilege.

* In North Wales, whither Vortigern withdrew, after the massacre, covered with confusion and reproach.—Warrington, p. 60.

† Geoffry of Monmouth says he had this warning delivered by the Bard, Merddin Emrys.

The grave of the lofty Gorthyn is seen from the highlands of Rhyvoniawg.†

SONG XXXI.

“ PEIS DINOGAT.”

A sarcastic Elegy upon the Death of Hengist, addressed to his son Octa, when he was taken at York, whither he had fled from the Battle of Caer Conan, in the Year 481.‡

THE garment of Tinogad § is variegated with grey stripes—a fabric of the skins of wild beasts—I will ridicule

* Perhaps Ambrosius, who was a relation of Vortigern.

† The wilds of Carnarvonshire.

‡ Compare Gibson's Camden Col, 847, with Warrington, p. 64.

§ “ Br—ch out of battle,”—an epithet of reproach, addressed to Octa, who had deserted his father in extremity, and fled into York. ✕ that lamponer, the captive Octa,* with his juggling whit whant.†

When thy father went out hunting, with his lance upon his shoulder, and his provisions in his hand, he would call his dogs so majestically—"Gif, gaf; thaly, thaly; thuc, " thuc."‡ Then would he kill a fish in a brook, as a lion kills a calf.

When thy father ascended the mountain, he brought back the head of a roebuck, of a wild boar, of a stag, of a grey moor hen from the hill, or of a fish from the falls of the Derwent.§

As many as thy father could reach with his flesh-piercer, of wild boars, that had been just dropped and licked—it was certain death to them all, unless they proved too nimble.

Were he to come upon me, and unawares, no foe that I have met, or that I shall encounter, would be more formidable. The man has not been nursed, who could be more penetrating in the hall,|| or more wary in battle.

On the ford of Penclwyd Pennant were his steeds: at a

* The author calls him Wyth, which means Octo; and in this burlesque passage, it also implies Octa.

† A mimicry of some Saxon words: the meaning is, possibly, white wand.

‡ More of Aneurin's Saxon, which I shall not attempt to translate.

§ A curious anti-climax.

|| Alluding to his massacre at the feast.

distance would he seek his fame, closely girt in his armour; but before the long-haired chief was covered with the sod, he, the son of the sea-horse, poured out the horns of mead.*

I saw the scene from the high land of the Done, † when they were carrying the sacrifice round the omen fire—I saw two, ‡ who fell away from their station—even two of the disorderly men, who were greatly thwarted—I saw warriors, who had made the great breach, approaching with a shout, and with the head of the freckled intruder—may the ravens devour it!

The remainder of the printed copy consists only of various readings, of certain passages, which had been collected by some ancient transcriber.

* Another sarcasm upon his outrage at the feast.

† The death of Hengist, as related above.

‡ A sarcasm upon Octa and Esca, who retired from the field, and shut themselves up in the city of York, where they were forced to surrender.

I have now, with considerable labour, and, to the best of my abilities, with accuracy and fidelity, translated and explained the Gododin of Aneurin, that the reader, having the whole work under his eye, may draw his own conclusion from it: and this, if I mistake not, must amount to a conviction, that the great catastrophe which the Bard deplores, was no other than that historical event, the massacre of the British nobles by the Saxon king, in the neighbourhood of Stonehenge; and consequently, that the magnificent temple, or sanctuary, so often introduced, was that identical structure.

From hence it must follow, that this pile could not have been erected, as fable has sometimes reported, in commemoration of the massacre; but that, on the contrary, it was a monument of venerable antiquity in the days of Hengist; and that its peculiar sanctity influenced the selection of that spot for the place of conference between the British and Saxon princes. It is equally clear, that the sacred building did not receive its name, Gwaith Emrys, from Emrys, or Ambrosius, a prince who fought with Hengist:*

* Yet I think it probable, that the real founder of this temple may have had the name of Emrys, which was a title of the Helio-arkite god, and hence conferred upon his priest, under whose direction the building was completed.

Aneurin seems to ascribe its construction to Morien, Janus Marinus, which was also a name of the same god, and of his priest.

The mythological Triads describe Morien the Full-bearded as a foreigner, who was vested with the sovereignty of Britain.—W. Archaiol, V. II. p. 64.

It is the general tradition of the Britons, that the Helio-arkite superstition was of foreign growth, and that it came to them by the way of Cornwall, and therefore probably from the tin merchants. See the 5th section. And it may be reasonably inferred, that the building of those temples, which are constructed upon astronomical principles, was not prior to the introduction of that superstition, whatever may have been its date, but that, on the other hand, it communicated to him its own name, as he was the president and defender of the Ambrosial stones.

That this ancient structure was sacred to the Druidical superstition, is fully evident, from the language in which it was described, and the great veneration in which it was held by the primitive Bards, those immediate descendants, and avowed disciples of the British Druids.

As the "Great sanctuary of the dominion," or metropolitan temple of our heathen ancestors, so complex in its plan, and constructed upon such a multitude of astronomical calculations, we find it was not exclusively dedicated to the sun, the moon, Saturn, or any other individual object of superstition; but it was a kind of pantheon, in which all the Arkite and Sabian divinities, of British theology, were supposed to have been present: for here we perceive Noe and Hu, the deified patriarch; Elphin and Rheiddin, the sun; Eseye, Isis; Kéd, Ceres, with the cell of her sacred fire; Llywy, Proserpine; Gwydien, Hermes; Budd, victory, and several others.

We learn from the Gododin, that the conference with Hengist, and the fatal banquet, took place upon the Ystre, or Cursus, which is still discernible, at the distance of half a mile North from the temple. Here, we are told, some temporary buildings of rudely hewn timber were erected, for the accommodation of the assembly.

It is easy to account for the choice of this spot, in an age of that gross superstition, which overspread our country in the fifth century. The Celtæ of Gaul and Britain, during their pagan state, were, for the most part, governed by their priests, whose custom it was to assemble, at a certain season, to deliberate upon the greatest civil questions, in loco consecrato, or within the verge of their sanctuaries. And as this particular sanctuary of Stonehenge had been esteemed pre-eminently sacred before the coming of the Romans, and whilst the Britons were an independent nation; so, at the departure of those foreigners, it had recovered its ancient reputation amongst a people, who were still pertinaciously attached to their national usages and superstitions. And May was the season appointed for the meeting; because it was the solemn anniversary of the British mysteries.

To most readers it must appear singular, that in an age when Britain was nominally christian, the Bards should speak with veneration of a heathen temple, in which heathen rites were still celebrated: the fact, however, is recorded against them in their own compositions. It may, indeed, be urged as an excuse for our present author, that he describes the ancient, rather than the actual solemnities of the place; and that during the great Bardic festival, some ancient rites may have been admitted, which were not, at that time, in general establishment: but I do not mean to be his apologist. Whatever Aneurin might have called himself, it is evident, from the warmth of his language, when speaking of those mystical characters, Hu, Kéd, Llywy, and the rest, that they were objects of veneration to him; and so, I am persuaded, they were to the body of the British nation, whose profession of Christianity was certainly very imperfect.

The Bards were generally their priests; and these, as it appears from their own works, were determined bigots to the ancient superstition. Many of the populace of this age were also disciples of Pelagius, whose great aim it was to blend the heterogeneous tissue of Druidism with a few shreds of Christianity. Could a people, who had profited so little by the light of the gospel, complain of the act of Providence, in depriving them of their dominion and their country?

The evidence which has been brought forward in this section, will, perhaps, prove to the satisfaction of the candid antiquary, that the larger British monuments, consisting of rude stone pillars, disposed into circles, whether of twelve, nineteen, thirty, or more stones, were temples, sacred to some divinity, or to all the divinities of the heathen Britons. I shall now proceed to make a few observations upon some other monuments of the same superstition.

In the account of the temple of the Gyvylchi, we are told, that “Not far from it there are three other large stones, pitched on end, in a triangular form.” Such appendages, either within or near to the sacred circles, often occur; and they have been generally regarded as constituting the cell or Adytum of their respective temples. Thus, at Abury, in the Northermost circle, is a cell or Kebla, formed of three stones, placed with an obtuse angle towards each opening to the North-east, before which lay the altar, as at Stonehenge.*

That the cell of Ceres, or “The stone cell of the honorary fire,” did exist at Stonehenge, is a circumstance ascertained by Aneurin’s Gododin; and it is highly probable, that the same was recognised in other temples, where Ceres presided, either alone, or in conjunction with other divinities: yet I have considerable doubts, whether the monuments of this kind, which I have seen, or of which I have read the description, did constitute the cells in question. I rather suspect, that these stones were either the very images of the gods, to whom the temples were dedicated, or that they were esteemed peculiarly sacred to them, and viewed as emblems of their presence. Thus the three large stones before the temple of the Gyvylychi, may have represented the three great objects of superstition, Hu, Kéd, or Ceridwen, and Llywy or Creirwy, or Bacchus, Ceres, and Proserpine, whose history and rites were closely connected in British mythology.

No images pertaining to our pagan progenitors, carved either into the human shape, or that of any animal, have been discovered and ascertained, unless the figures portrayed upon the British coins should be thought to deserve the name of images: hence it is probable, that such things were, at least, very rare amongst them.

As the Britons had preserved the usage of the earliest ages, in the form and rude materials of their open temples, why may they not have observed the same rule with regard to images? And we have good authority to assert, that—“ In ancient times, they had no images in their temples;

* Maurice’s Ind: Antiq. Vol. VI. p. 133.

 “ but in lieu of them, they used conical stones, called “ Βασιτυλια, under which representation their deity was often “ worshipped.”*

Mr. Bryant also remarks, that Ab-adir was a στυλος, or stone pillar, representing Ops, the wife of Saturn. One of these stones, according to Pausanias, stood at Delphi: it was deemed very sacred, and used to have libations of wine poured upon it daily; and upon festivals, it was otherwise honoured.†

Again we are told, that “ Near the temple of Eleusinian “ Damater, in Arcadia, were two vast stones, called Pe- “ troma, one of which was erect, and the other was laid
 “ over, and inserted into the former. There was a hollow “ place in the upper stone, with a lid to it. In this, among “ other things, was kept a kind of mask, which was thought
 “ to represent the countenance of Damater, to whom these “ stones were sacred.”‡

These passages are adduced, in order to shew, that neither the form nor the situation of those rude isolated stones, which are attached to our British temples, is irreconcilable with the primitive memorials of those very divinities, which our ancestors venerated.

* Bryant's Analysis, V. I. p. 49.

† Ibid. p. 476.

‡ Ibid. V. II. p. 203.

Leaving this hint to the consideration of the antiquary, I go on to inquire for another kind of apparatus, which was deemed essential to the due celebration of the heathen mysteries.

In the tale of Taliesin's initiation, of which I have treated at large in the preceding section, and in some of that Bard's poems upon the same subject, we are told that Ceridwen, transforming herself into a bird, swallowed the novice, who had taken the form of a grain of pure wheat; that she continued for some time pregnant of him, and that, at the expiration of that period, he was born again.

This is a dark allegory; but we shall find others upon the same topic, of easier solution.

In another passage which I have quoted, the Bard represents himself as a grain of the Arkites, which had vegetated upon the mount, and produced an ear of corn; in this state, the reaper placed in a close, smoky recess, in order to ripen.

In a third passage, the Bard plainly tells us, that he had endured a close confinement in the hall of Ceridwen, where he was subjected to penance, and modelled into the form of a perfect man. This is also the representation which Hywel, the son of Owen, gives of the affair.

Now it may be fairly presumed, that this confinement in the womb of Ceridwen, in the hall of that goddess, and in the smoky recess, implies one and the same thing; and those representations clearly allude to the inclosure of the novice, either for mortification, and trial of his fortitude, or for appropriate instruction in some private cell, which was sacred to Ceres, which bore her name, and was, therefore, deemed to constitute her mystical person, of whom the aspirant was to be born again.

Something of this kind, I presume, was also implied by the Πασις, or bed, in which it was requisite that the Greek aspirant should be covered, before he could be admitted to the greater mysteries.

I have some reason to think, that the British cells appropriated to this use, are to be recognized amongst those monuments, which are known by the general name of Cromlech. These consist of a certain number of stones, pitched in the ground, so as to form a cell, which is covered over with a flat stone of enormous dimensions. We have seen, that there are several of these Cromlechs near the circle of the Gyvylchi, in Snowdon; and they are generally found either in the neighbourhood, or in the very centre of similar monuments.

The date of these erections being very remote, and their use entirely forgotten, it is not improbable, that being misled by certain resemblances, which present themselves to superficial observation, we confound two or three kinds of monuments which are really distinct, and which were erected for different purposes; and that in consequence of this mistake, when we have discovered the use of one Cromlech, we make erroneous conclusions respecting others.

I shall mention two or three opinions, which have been thus generally applied.

In the Cromlech, some antiquaries see nothing but the bloody altars of the Druids, smoking with human victims.

To this opinion, it has been replied, that many of them seem, by their gibbous form, and slanting position, to be very ill-contrived for the purpose of altars, and that they bear no marks of the action of fire, upon the upper side.

Others pronounce them altogether sepulchral, and support their opinion, with the evidence of bones and urns, which have been found under some few of them; but it may be objected, that several Cromlechs which have been examined, shew no vestige of sepulture, and others seem to have been badly calculated for the purpose, as standing upon unbroken rocks.

If it be urged, that because some of them are found to be sepulchres, they must all be regarded as of the sepulchral form; this argument will only add support to my hypothesis. Initiation represented death, and a renovation from the dead. In the British mysteries, the novice passed the river of death, in the boat of Garan hir, the Charon of antiquity: and before he could be admitted to this privilege, it was requisite that he should have been mystically buried, as well as mystically dead. And thus much seems to be implied in the ancient Greek formulary—Ἰπὸ τοῦ σαρκοῦ ὑπεδύον—“ I covered myself, or was covered in the bed.”

Cromlech, according to Mr. Owen, whose opinion, upon this subject, deserves attention, is nothing more than the vulgar name for the Crair Gorsedd, Maen Llog, or Maen Gorsedd; the stone of covenant, or altar of the Bards; which was placed within the Cylch Cyngrair, or circle of federation: and on which were performed various ceremonies belonging to Bardism.*

* See W. Eng. Dict. V. Cromlech.

Crair Gorsedd, literally implies the token or pledge of the supreme seat; and Maen Llog, the stone of the ark or chest. It is therefore, the same as Aneurin's Llogell Byd, ark of the world, in which the priest of Hu had been inclosed. The application of these terms to the Cromlech, goes a great way towards establishing my opinion: for as a due initiation into the sacred mysteries, was the last requisite towards completing the covenant or federation of the Bards; so this stone of the ark was employed in the celebration of those mysteries.

That some of the monuments, called Cromlechs, were actually resorted to in celebrating the rites of Ceres, and that the stone arks, or chests which they covered, constituted the womb or hall of the goddess, in which the aspirants were inclosed, will appear from the following observations.

Ceridwen, or Ceres, was the genius of the ark; and that ark had its representative in the temple, or sanctuary of the goddess. Hence the mythological triads record the feat of Gwgawn Lawgadarn, the severe one, with the mighty hand, who rolled the stone of Maen-Arch, the stone ark, from the valley to the top of the hill, though it was so large, that not less than sixty oxen could have moved it.

This Gwgawn was a mere personification of the Druidical Hierarchy, or of the ministers which they employed: and the stone, of the stone ark, is not to be understood as implying one individual slab, but as a general appurtenant to a kind of monument known by that name; and as a memorial of its prototype, the ark of Noah.

If we look upon the tops of our hills for monumental stones, which answer this description, we shall find them only in the enormous Cromlech, the covering stone of the Kist-vaen, stone chest, or ark—a name precisely synonymous with Maen-Arch.

That all these monuments could not have been mere altars, or mere sepulchres, is evident from their very form. For instance, the monument in Gower, called Arthur's stone, is thus described.

“ They (the stones) are to be seen upon a jutting, at
 “ the North-west of Kevn Bryn, the most noted hill in “ Gower.—Their fashion and posture is this. There is “ a vast unwrought stone, probably about twenty tuns “ weight, supported by six or seven others that are “ not above four feet high; and these are set in a circle,
 “ some on end, and some edgewise, or sidelong, to bear
 “ the great one up. The great one is much diminished of “ what it has been in bulk, as having five tuns, or more,
 “ by report, broke off it, to make mill-stones: so that I “ guess, the stone originally to have been, between twenty-“ five and thirty tuns in weight.—The common people call
 “ it Arthur's stone—under it is a well, which, as the neigh“ bours tell me, has a flux and reflux with the sea.”*

Here we find the Cromlech, as the cover of a mystic cell or stone ark, furnished with its sacred fountain. The ascribing of this, and similar monuments, to Arthur, is not, as our author supposes, a vulgar conceit, respecting the hero of that name, who lived in the sixth century. I have distinguished an Arthur, celebrated in the mythological triads, and in the works of the Bards; as the representative of the patriarch, who was inclosed in the ark; to the traditional history of which, the fountain under this Maenarch, or stone-ark, seems to have had an allusion: for we are told that the inclosure of Sidi, or seat of Ceres, contained a well of water which was sweeter than wine. I have seen the remains of a similar cell, in Llanvareth, in Radnorshire, inclosing a fair spring, called Fynawn Einion, or the well of the just one: and I learn from Mr. Maurice, that fountains often occurred in the sacred cells of antiquity, which were appropriated to the celebration of mysteries.

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 711.

Let us hear the description of another Cromlech, which appears as an appendage to an ancient temple.

“ There are in this county (Pembrokeshire) several such “ circular stone monuments as that described in Carmar“ thenshire, by the name of Meineu Gwyr; and Kevn “ Llechart, in Glamorganshire. But the most remarkable
 “ is that which is called Y Gromlech—in Nevern* parish, “ where are several rude stones pitched on end, in a circu- “ lar order; and in the midst of the circle, a vast rude stone, “ placed on several pillars. The diameter of the æra is “ about fifty feet. The stone, supported in the midst of “ this circle, is eighteen feet long, and nine in breadth;
 “ and at the one end, it is about three feet thick, but “ thinner at the other. There lies also by it, a piece bro“ ken off, about ten feet in length, and five in breadth, “ which seems more than twenty oxen could draw. It is “ supported by three large rude pillars, about eight feet “ high; but there are also five others, which are of no

* Nev-ern, pledge of heaven.

“ use at present, as not being high enough, or duly placed,
 “ to bear any weight of the top stone. Under this stone
 “ the ground is neatly flagged, considering the rudeness of “ monuments of this kind.”*

This Cromlech, covering a rude, but magnificent cell, with a paved floor, and placed in the midst of the sacred circle, has not the appearance of a sepulchral monument.

Many of these monuments, it has been observed, bear the name of Arthur, being styled his tables, his quoits, and the like.

But in the tale of Taliesin's initiation, the table of Arthur is connected with the mysteries of Ceridwen, and in Llan Beudy† parish, in Carmarthenshire, we find a monument which joins the name of Arthur with another name, which we can only refer to that goddess. It is called Bwrdd Arthur, Arthur's table, and Gwâl y Vîlast, the couch, or Πασος, of the Greyhound bitch.

This is a rude stone, about ten yards in circumference, and above three feet thick, supported by four pillars, which are about two feet and a half high.‡

Not to insist upon the dogs, which were always exhibited in the mysteries of Isis and Ceres, and the title of dogs, with which their priests were distinguished, it must be remarked, that in the mythological tale which I have just

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 759.—See also 707, 740, &c.

† Ox-house.

‡ Gibson's Camden, Col. 752.

mentioned, we are told, that Ceridwen transformed herself into a greyhound bitch, and in that form, chased the aspirant towards the river.

In this monument, therefore, we have a commemoration of the Diluvian patriarch, under the mythological name of Arthur; and of the genius of the ark, under her assumed character of a greyhound bitch.

And lest it should be thought, that the latter circumstance is purely accidental, it must be observed, that more than one spot preserves the memory of the mystical bitch.

There is a monument of the same kind, and distinguished by the same name of Gwâl y Vilast, in Glamorganshire, and a third, called Llech yr Ast, the flat stone of the bitch, in Cardiganshire.*

And it may be suspected, that some of the connections of this mystical lady, had assumed a correspondent form; as we find Ffynawn Maen Milgi, the spring of the greyhound's stone, a remarkably large stream, issuing out of the side of Berwyn mountain, in Meirionethshire †

Near Llech yr Ast, in Cardiganshire, there are five Kist Vaens, stone chests, or cells, and a circular area, inclosed with rude pillars, &c.; so that it appears to have been a work of the very same kind, as the temple of Ceres and Proserpine, in the Gyvylchi.

Ceridwen, the British Ceres, was also represented under the character of the Giantess. Taliesin, giving an account of his initiation, styles her—Hén Widdon Ddulon, the old dark-smiling Giantess. Under this figure she claims another monument in Cardiganshire, called Llech y Gowres, the flat stone of the Giantess.—"Being an exceeding vast stone, placed on four other very large pillars or supporters, about the height of five or six feet. Besides which four, there are two others pitched on end, under the top stone, but much lower.—There are also three stones, two large ones, and behind them a lesser, lying on the ground, at each end of this monument.—This Llech y Gowres stands on such a small bank, or rising, in a plain open field, as the five stones, near the circular monument, called Rolrich stones, in Oxfordshire."*

* Gibson's Camden, Col: 772, 773.

† Camb. Register, V. I. p. 298.

Near this Llech y Gowres are several monuments, which have an evident relation to the same subject; as Meini Hirion, retaining the name and the form of Ceridwen's temple in the Gyvylchi; Meini Kyvrivol the stones of the equalized computation, being nineteen in number, the cycle of the sun and moon, or Liber and Ceres; Hir vaen Gwyddog, the high stone of the Mystagogue; unless it be a corruption of Gwydion, Hermes, or Gwyddon, the Giantess: this is a pillar, about sixteen feet high, three feet broad, and two thick. Not far from it is a Maen y Prenvol, the stone of the wooden ark, or chest; this must have been the memorial, or the repository of an ark of wood:—and Gwely Taliesin, the bed or, Παση; of Taliesin, which is also a kind of stone chest.

"I take this, and all others of this kind, (continues my

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 773.

“ author) to be old heathen monuments, and am far from believing that Taliesin was interred there.”*

And if we allow the probable conjecture, that they are heathen monuments, there is every reason, to pronounce them Druidical, and to infer, that they were constructed for that purpose, which general analogy, their peculiar form, and their very names declare.

Had they been erected since the times of the Druids, their names, or the traditions respecting them, would surely have preserved some memorial of the occasion of their construction. Instead of this, we generally find some circumstance, either in their names or situation, which connects them with the Druidical establishment.

Thus, the great Anglesea Cromlech is surrounded by Tre'r Dryw, Druid's town; Tre'r Beirdd, Bard's town; Bôd Owyr, the dwelling of the Ovates, and the monument called Cerig y Bryngwyn, stones of the hill of judicature.†

So again; there is a parish in Denbeighshire, called Cerig y Drudion, Druid's stones; and the monuments which entitle it to this name, are two Kist Vaens, or stone chests, covered with their ponderous slabs, or Cromlechs; and these chests, are traditionally reported to have served the purpose of prisons.‡

I must here repeat my hint, that the Cromlech, and

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 773.

† Ibid. Col. 809.

‡ Ibid. Col. 813.

Kistvaen, are constituent parts of the same monument, which is distinguished by one or other of these names, as the incumbent stone, or the inclosed cell, becomes the most considerable object of remark. And though I do not deny, that some monuments of similar form, have served the purpose of sepulchres; yet, I am persuaded, that they were in general, the Maenarchs, or stone arks of the Triads, and those in which the British Ceres, and Proserpine, confined and humbled their votaries.

If it be objected, that at present, we seldom find these cells sufficiently close and secure, for the purpose of confinement; it must be recollected, that time and accident have injured them; that in the age of superstition, it is probable they were surrounded with a fence of wood, or some perishing materials, which have long since disappeared; and that the confinement itself, is not supposed to have been absolutely involuntary. It was a trial of fortitude, rather than of force.

Even the traditions which report the larger works of this kind to have been sepulchral, will, if closely examined, favour that idea of their application, which I have suggested. Thus, “ We have a tradition, that the largest Cromlech in this county (Anglesea) is the monument of Bronwen, daughter of King Llyr, or Leirus, who, you know, is said to begin his reign, Anno Mundi 3105.”*

I shall not take the trouble to examine the æra of this Anno Mundi sovereign, who, as such, was unknown in Wales before the days of Geoffry, of Monmouth, though our modern heralds have made some efforts to verify his history.

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 810.

The tale was, originally, mythological; and the daughter of Llŷr, the Cordelia of Shakespeare, was Creirddylad, whom Gwyn ab Nudd, the British Pluto, claims as his mistress.* This lady, therefore, was our Proserpine:† and the tradition respecting the great Anglesea Cromlech, amounts to nothing more than this—that it constituted a cell, sacred to Proserpine.

I find that the same Bronwen, the daughter of Llŷr, like, Creirwy, the daughter of Ceridwen, had a brother, named Brân, the raven, who had the disposal of the mystical cauldron.‡

This history, therefore, brings us home to the sanctuary, and to the mystical rites of Ceridwen and her family. The daughter of Llŷr, the sea, the mistress of Pluto, and the sister of the raven, was no other than Creirwy, the daughter of the British Ceres, to whom the same cauldron was peculiarly sacred.

The Cromlech is distinguished in the Triads by another name, synonymous with Maenarch, and referable to the history of Ceridwen, considered as the genius of the ark. The name I mean is Maen Ketti.

D D

* W Archaiol. p. 166.

† See some farther account of her in the next section.

‡ See Mr. Turner's Vindication, p. 233.

We are told, that the three mighty labours of the island of Britain were, lifting the stone of KETTI; building the work of-EMRYS; and piling up the mount of the assemblies.*

The work of Emrys implies the sacred circles, such as Stonehenge, which is known by that name; the Main Ambres, in Cornwall; Dinas Emrys, in Snowdon; and other Petra Ambrosiai; and in Silbury-hill, we may contemplate the mount of the assemblies: but what third kind of British monument is there, which displays the effect of great labour in lifting a stone, unless it be the enormous Cromlech?

Ketti is a derivative of Ket, and this must have implied an ark or chest; for we still retain its diminutive form, Keten, to denote a small chest, or cabinet.

I have had frequent occasion to remark, that Ceridwen, the Arkite goddess, is distinguished by the name of Kéd. Aneurin, in his Gododin, repeatedly calls her by this name, and speaks of Cibno Kéd as synonymous with Pair Ceridwen, the cauldron of Ceridwen, or sacred vase of Ceres. Now, those who are at all conversant in Cambro-British writing, must be aware, that Kéd and Két are precisely the same word, it being usual in our old orthography, to write the final t, where at present we use the d. Thus we have bot, bod; cat, cad; tat, tad; and a hundred more; for the rule is general, and almost without exception.

From the things which were produced out of the ark, or chest, the word Ked figuratively implies a benefit, aid, re- lief; wherefore Maen Ket-ti signifies the stone of the arkite power, or the stone of beneficence: and it could have been no other than the ponderous covering of that cell which represented the ark, and which was eminently dedicated to the beneficent Ceres.*

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 70.

I have now shewn, that these monuments frequently retain the name of Arthur, the mythological representative of Noah, and the husband of Gwenhwyvar, the lady on the summit of the water; that is, the ark, or its substitute—that the same monuments are distinguished by several titles, which imply an ark, or chest—that they commemorate the various names and characters of Ceridwen, the genius of the ark, whilst one of them, in particular, is distinguished by the name of her votary, Taliesin—that they commemorate the superstition of the Druids, both by their names and their local situation—that they are reported to have been used as prisons—and that the mysteries of Ceridwen and her daughter, were celebrated in the circle of the Gyylchi, to which the Cromlech and its Kist Vaen are attached.

And from these premises I infer, that such monuments generally had a relation to that ceremony, which is mystically described as the aspirant's confinement in the womb of Ceridwen, whence he was born again, and thus became her mystical child. For this confinement of the aspirant, which preceded his being shut up in the coracle, and cast into the sea, in the course of the greater mysteries, could have meant nothing more than his inclosure in some cell, which was sacred to that goddess. And Taliesin has told us, that the Llan or cell in which he was inclosed, was Uch llawr, above the surface of the ground.

D D 2

* I find this goddess described by several derivatives of Kêd or Ket, as Kedig, Kedwy, Y Gedawl, which equally imply the Arkite and the beneficent.

Of the ceremony of imprisoning the noviciates in such cells, we may find some farther hints in the mythological Triads.

Thus—"The three pre-eminent prisoners of the island of Britain, were Llyr Llediaith, in the prison of Euros-wydd the sovereign, Madawc, the son of Medron, and Gwair, the son of Geiriawn. And one was pre-eminent over the three, namely, Arthur, who was imprisoned three nights in the inclosure of Oeth and Anoeth, and three nights with the lady of Pendragon, and three nights in the prison of Kûd, under the flat stone of Echemeint: and one youth released him from the three prisons, namely, Goreu, the son of Cystenin, his nephew."*

The whole of this account was apparently extracted from some ancient mythological tale, relating to the deluge, and to certain mysteries which were celebrated in memorial of it. A short analysis of the circumstances will evince the probability of this fact.

The first of the noted prisoners was Llyr Llediaith, that is, half language, or mysterious representation of the sea.†

Our heralds have not only given Caractacus, the celebrated hero of the first century, a grandfather of this

* W. Archæiol. V. II. p. 12. Tri. 50.

† Or, taking the words in the order in which they stand—"Sea of mystery."

name; but have also furnished this grandfather with a long series of progenitors: so that we have Llyr Llediaith, ab Paror, ab Ceri hir Llyngwyn, ab Ceidog, ab Arth, ab Meirion, ab Eranit, ab Eidol.*

But as these heralds could have had no authority for such early pedigrees, excepting the mystical poems of the Bards, and some old tales, which were purely mythological; as it has been very usual, since the days of Geoffry of Monmouth, to mistake British mythology for history; and as the interpretation of proper names generally furnishes the best key to Bardic œnigmas, it may not be amiss to try the series now before us by this rule.

Here, then, we are presented with the mysterious representation of the sea, the son of him who remained, the son of the lofty seed of the white lake (reputed the first navigator amongst the ancestors of the Cymry), the son of the preserver, the son of the bear (Arth, from Arcto, to confine), the son of the guardian, the son of the vessel, the son of the living one.

To an ordinary reader, this does not sound like the real pedigree of an ancient British prince; it is rather a series of mystical terms, relating to the history of the deluge.

Even if we suppose that these mythological titles were conferred upon the ancestors of Caractacus, it is nothing more than an early instance of a custom, which is known to have prevailed in the fifth, and beginning of the sixth century, when the Britons, delivered from the Roman yoke, attempted to re-establish their ancient superstition.

* Owen's Cam. Biog. V. Llyr.

And still, the confinement of Llyr, in the prison of Eurosweydd, the splendid destroyer, seems to allude to his initiation into certain mysteries, rather than to his detention at Rome, either with his illustrious grandson, or as a hostage in his place.

The imprisonment of Madawc, who is sometimes styled the son of Mellt, lightning, is said, in another Triad, to have been amongst the Gwyddelian Picts; and the legend, probably, alludes to some similar mysteries, which were celebrated in the North of Britain, when the Romans were masters of the South.

The nature of Gwair's imprisonment may be easily comprehended, by the assistance of Taliesin's Preiddeu Annwn,* spoils of the deep, or ravages of the deluge, which begins thus—

“ I will adore the sovereign, the supreme ruler of the “ land! If he extended his dominion over the shores of the “ world, yet in good order was the prison of Gwair, in “ Caer Sidi. Through the mission of Pwyll and Pryderi “ (reason and forethought), no one before him entered “ into it. The heavy, blue chain didst thou, O just man!
 “ endure; and for the spoils of the deep, woful is thy “ song; and till the doom shall it remain in the Bardic “ prayer, Thrice the fullness of Prydwen did we enter “ into the deep; excepting seven, none have returned from “ Caer Sidi.”

This is clearly the history of the deluge; and Gwair, renovation, the just man, being the first and principal person who entered Caer Sidi, the ark, when the Supreme exerted his power over the shores of the world, could have been no other than the patriarch himself.

* Appendix, No. 3.

Gwair is mystically represented in the Triads as the son of Gwestyl, the great tempest: and in another place, as the son of Geiriawon, the word of justice. We are told, that this personage and his family were confined in the prison of Oeth and Anoeth, from which none of his posterity ever attempted to escape.* Hence it appears, that the prison of Oeth and Anoeth was the same as Caer Sidi; that is, in a primary sense, the ark itself, and in a secondary acceptance, the Arkite temple.

Oeth and Anoeth seem to be nothing more than the antiquated orthography of Wýth and Anwýth, wrath, and the remission of wrath—or the accumulation and the subsiding of the deluge.

We have seen that Cuhelyn uses the term Anoeth, to describe the great temple, before which Hengist committed his outrage—that is, Stonehenge.

Myvir corein mirein Anoeth.

“ The study of the fair circle of Anoeth.”

And Taliesin uses Di-wyth and Gorwyth, as synonymous with Anoeth and Oeth.

Yn annwfn y Di-wyth

Yn annwfn y Gorwyth.†

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 68. Tri. 61.

† W. Archaiol. p. 35. The lines seem to have been transposed by some copyist, who did not understand them.

“ In the deep which is void of wrath;
 “ In the deep where extreme indignation dwells.”

The perpetual imprisonment of Gwair and his posterity in this inclosure, can only mean, that the patriarch and his family were once shut up in the ark, and that the Druids acknowledged none as his legitimate descendants, but those who were initiated into the Arkite mysteries, and who perpetually kept within the pale, or strictly adhered to the laws of their institution.

Hence we perceive, that Arthur's first confinement in the prison of Oeth and Anoeth, was the same with that of Gwair; or, in other words, that the Arthur of mythology is only another representative of the polyonymous patriarch. And this idea is confirmed by the same poem of Taliesin upon the spoils of the deep, where we find Arthur presiding in the sacred ship.—“ When we went with Arthur in his “ splendid labours, excepting seven, none returned from “ Caer Veditwid.”

Arthur's second imprisonment with Wen Bendragon, or the lady of the supreme leader, out of which Geoffry of Monmouth has worked up a curious tale, is either a duplicate of the same history, taken from an old mythological allegory, or else it refers to the mysteries of Ceres. For the lady here introduced was Eigyrr, the generative principle, or the source of generation, and therefore the Magna Mater, Ceridwen, or Ceres.

Arthur's third imprisonment in the cell of Kūd, or Kyd, under the flat stone of Echemaint, evidently alludes to the British mysteries, which commemorated the Diluvian history. And the cell appropriated to this emblematical confinement, must have been of that kind, which we still discover under enormous "Flat stones," in various parts of Britain.

As to the name of Kyd, the proprietor of this prison, I have already remarked, that it is an appellation of the Arkite goddess, and of the ark itself.—“ Let truth be ascribed
“ to Menwyd, the dragon chief of the world, who formed
“ the curvatures of Kyd, which passed the dale of grievous “ water, having the fore-part stored with corn, and mounted “ aloft, with the connected serpents.”*

I also observe, that in an old christian poem, which goes under the name of Taliesin, the fish which swallowed Jonas is called Kyd.—

A ddug Jonas o berfedd Kyd †

“ Who brought Jonas out of the belly of Kyd?”

This is only the Greek κρητος, which Mr. Bryant pronounces to have been an emblem of the ark.‡ Whether our ancestors viewed their Kyd under this emblem or not, I will not pretend to decide; but I observe that, in one old copy on vellum, the cell under the flat stone is simply called Carchar Hûd, the prison of mystery.

The name Echemaint, which is given to this stone, I do not understand: in another copy, it is called Y Llech a Chymmraint, the flat stone of social privilege: and this seems to describe an instrument of initiation, which admitted the aspirant to the privileges of the regenerate society.

* Appendix, No. 12.

† W. Archaiol. p. 43.

‡ Analysis, V. II, p. 301 and 408.

But to dismiss this inquiry. Under what flat stones could the Arkite goddess have confined her votaries, in order to confer these privileges upon them, unless it were those which are attached to her sanctuaries, which cover receptacles proper for the purpose, which are denominated stone arks, and which, in their local designations, retain the name of Arthur and Ceridwen, and the memorial of Arkite mysteries?

Arthur is said to have been released from each of the three prisons by Goreu, Best, the son of Cystenin, which is the British name of Constantine; but no son of that prince could have released the patriarch from the prototype of the mystic cell. We may therefore suppose, that the compiler of the tale plays upon the sound of the word, and that we ought to understand Cistenin, the minister of the ark.

SECTION V.

Traditions relating to the Progress, Revolutions, and Suppression of the British Superstition.

A SUCCESSFUL investigation of the progress and revolutions of Druidism, might be expected to attract the notice of the public. It would certainly be curious to trace the changes, whether improvements or corruptions, which took place in the religion of our early progenitors, and to have an opportunity of discriminating between those rites and superstitions, which they originally brought with them into Britain, and those which, in the course of ages, they adopted from other nations, or devised from their own fancy.

But for the basis of such an investigation, we want an authentic historical document, enlightened by accurate chronology, and divested of allegorical obscurity. Upon this subject, no such aid is to be found. The religion of the Britons, like that of other heathens, grew up in the dark. All that we have left is a mass of mythological notices, which were certainly written in ages, when Druidism was in high esteem, and had many votaries; and from those, the genuine opinion and tradition of the Britons, during those ages, may be in some measure collected. From these ænigmatical tablets, I shall attempt to make a few slight sketches, with the hope of gratifying the curious, and affording some little light to the antiquary; though from the nature of my materials, I almost despair of amusing the general reader.

In the first place, it may be inferred from the tone of the evidence already produced, that the primitive religion of the Cymry (long before the age of the oldest Bard who is now extant,) was a kind of apostasy from the patriarchal religion, or a mere corruption of it.

In the tradition of this people, I have remarked the local account of a vessel, from which they assert, that their progenitors sprung after a general deluge: I have noticed their exclusive claim to the universal patriarch of all nations; I have observed, that their superstition strongly verged from all points, towards the history of the deluge, and towards that system of theology, which Mr. Bryant denominates Arkite: I have shewn that they worshipped the patriarch, as a deity, though they had not forgotten, that he was a just and pious man: and I think I have proved, that the Ceridwen of the Druids was as much the genius of the ark, as the Ceres and Isis of our great mythologist.

If the Bards exhibit, together with this Arkite superstition, that mixture of Sabian idolatry, or worship of the host of heaven, which the second volume of the Analysis traces, as blended with the same mythology, over great part of the ancient world; yet we observe, that the Solar divinity is always represented as the third, or youngest of the great objects of adoration: hence it may be inferred, that the worship of the patriarch, in conjunction with the sun, was an innovation, rather than an original and fundamental principle, of the Druidical religion.

That this opinion was inculcated by our old mythologists, appears from a very singular triad, which I propose to analyze. But the reader of taste may require some apology, for the homeliness of its characters.

Mythologists have never been very scrupulous in the selection of their figures. Gods and their priests have been presented to us, under the form of every animal character, from the elephant and the lion, to the insect and the reptile. And it is not to be expected, that our ancestors should have been more delicate in their choice, than other nations more enlightened and more refined.

Without any such affectation of superior taste, they bring forward three distinct states of the British hierarchy, but all of them more or less Arkite, under the characters of three mighty swine herds.

Their disciples, of course, consisted of a multitude of swine. I am not calling them names—these are the titles they thought proper to assume: and no doubt, they regarded them as very respectable and becoming.

Though this representation be partly peculiar to the Britons, it has still, some analogy with the notions and the mythology of other heathens.

Thus, we are told that the priests of the Cabiri were styled Sues—swine. Greece and Rome consecrated the sow to Ceres, and gave it the name of the mystical animal: The learned and ingenious M. De Gebelin says, that this selection was made, not only because the sow is a very prolific animal, but also, because she plows the ground, and because the plough has a figure similar to that of her snout, and produces the same effect.*

The Cymry proceeded somewhat further, but still upon the same road. In Britain, Ceres herself assumes the character of Hwch, a sow; she addresses her child, or devotee, by the title of Porchellan, little pig; her congregation are Moch, swine; her chief priest is Turch, a boar, or Gwydd Hwch, boar of the wood, or grove; and her Hierarchy is Meichiad, a swine herd.

The triad which I have mentioned, upon the subject of the three mighty swine herds, is preserved in several copies, † from a collation of which, I shall subjoin an English version, and add some remarks upon each particular.

“ The first of the mighty swine herds of the island of “ Britain, was Pryderi, the son of Pwyll, chief of Annwn,
 “ who kept the swine of his foster-father, Pendaran Dyved,
 “ in the vale of Cwch, in Emlyn, whilst his own father,
 “ Pwyll, was in Annwn.”

In order to understand the meaning of this mythology, it will be necessary first of all, to take some notice of the persons and places here introduced.

Pryderi, called also Gwynvardd Dyved, was the son of Pwyll, Lord of Dyved, the son of Meirig, the son of Arcol,

* Monde Primitif. Tom. IV. p. 579.

† W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 6. 20. 72. 77.

with the long hand, the son of Pyr, or Pur of the East, the son of Llion the ancient.*

Though the vanity of certain Welsh families, has inscribed these princes in the first page of their pedigrees, it would be absurd to connect their history with any known chronological period. It is purely mythological, as appears from the very import of their names.

Pryderi is deep thought, or mature consideration: and the general subject of this thought may be collected from his other title—Gwynvardd Dyved—Druid of Demetia.

Pwyll, his father, is reason, discretion, prudence, or patience. That both the father and the son were characters, wholly mystical, or personifications of abstract ideas; is shewn in Taliesin's spoils of the deep,† where we are told, that the diluvian patriarch first entered the ark, by the counsel of Pwyll and Pryderi.

Meirig is a guardian. In this series, the word ought to be translated, though it has been the proper name of several Britons.

Ar-col may imply the man of the lofty mount; but as Arcol with the long hand, was avowedly of Eastern extraction; it is probable his name may have been of Eastern derivation: and if so, he may have been no less a personage than the great Hercules, who was known in the East by similar titles, as we are informed by Mr. Bryant;

* Cambrian Biog. under the articles Pryderi, Pwyll, and Meirig.

† Appendix, No. 3.

who tells us, that in the neighbourhood of Tyre and Sidon, the chief deity went by the name of Ourchol, the same as Archel and Arcles of Egypt, whence came the Heracles and Hercules of Greece and Rome.*

But the history of Hercules, as we learn from the same author, alludes to a mixture of Arkite and Sabian idolatry. — “It is said of Hercules, that he traversed a vast sea, in a cup, or skiff, which Nereus, or Oceanus sent him for his preservation: the same history is given to Helius, (the sun) who is said to have traversed the ocean in the same vehicle.” †

If the critics can pardon an attempt to identify Arcol, in the character of Hercules, I need not dread their censure for supposing, that his father Pyr, or Pur of the East, is to be found amongst the known connexions of that Demigod.

Pyr is the Greek name of fire, and mythologically of the sun, who was the same as Hercules. And the great analyzer of mythology assures us, that Pur was the ancient name of Latian Jupiter, the father of Hercules; that he was the deity of fire; that his name was particularly retained amongst the people of Præneste, who had been addicted to the rites of fire; that they called their chief god Pur, and dealt particularly in divination by lots, termed of old, Purim. ‡

* Analysis, V. I. p. 40.

† Ibid. V. II. p. 404.

‡ Ibid. V. I. p. 124.

From hence it may be conjectured, with some degree of probability, that this mystical family, which was of Eastern origin, had a certain connexion with the history of Jupiter and Hercules.

But lest we should lose sight of the fundamental principles of Arkite theology, our mythological herald takes care to inform us, that Pyr, of the East, was the son of Llion the Ancient, that is, the deluge, or the Diluvian god: for the waters of Llion are the great abyss, which is contained under the earth, and which once burst forth, and overwhelmed the whole world.

This mythological pedigree, therefore, only declares the Arkite origin of a certain mystical system, which was introduced into Britain through the medium of some Eastern people.

The characters here introduced, are represented as princes of Demetia, the country of Seithenin Saidi, who is Saturn or Noah. This region was so greatly addicted to mystical rites, that it was called, by way of eminence, Bro yr Húd, the land of mystery, and said to have been formerly enveloped in Llengél, a veil of concealment.

But we are not immediately to conclude, that Pryderi conducted his swine, according to the rules of his Eastern ancestors. These were not the property of his father and grandfather, but the herd of Pendaran, lord of thunder, otherwise called Arawn, the Arkite, and managed under his supreme administration. His authority was already established in the West, and, as we shall presently see, it was different from that of Arcol, and Pyr of the East.

Pryderi kept the swine of his foster-father, Pendaran, in the vale of Cwch, the boat, or ark, in Emlyn, the clear lake, whilst his own father, Pwyll, was in Annwn, the deep—the deluge.

I must leave the great swine-herd to the management of his charge, whilst I seek an elucidation of this mythology, from a curious tale upon the subject of Pwyll's adventures.*

This tale manifestly alludes to Arkite theology; and I think, also, to the reformation of some foreign abuses, or innovations, which were intermixing with the doctrines and rites of the natives, and to the rejection of Sabian idolatry, or solar worship.

The reader may judge for himself, by the following abstract:

Pwyll, lord of the seven provinces of Dyved, being at Arberth, high grove, one of his chief mansions, appoints a hunting party—that is, the celebration of mysteries: thus Ceridwen is said to have hunted the aspirant.

The place which he chose for this exercise, was Glyn-Cwch, the vale of the boat, or ark. Accordingly, he set out from Arberth, and came to the head of the grove of Diar-wya, the solemn preparation of the egg.

* Cambrian Register, V. I. p. 177, and V. II. p. 332. From the Red Book of Jesus Col. Oxford, a MS. of the 14th century.

Pliny's account of the preparation of the Anguinum, by the Druids, in the character of serpents, is well known. Mr. Bryant also observes, that an egg was a very ancient emblem of the ark; and that in the Dionusiaca, and in other mysteries, one part of the nocturnal ceremony consisted in the consecration of an egg.*

In this grove of the preparation of the egg, Pwyll continued that night; and early in the morning he proceeded to the vale of the boat, and turned out his dogs—priests, who were called ΚΥΒΕΣ,† dogs—under the wood, or grove.

He blew his horn—that is, the herald's horn—Thus Taliessin says—“ I have been Mynawg, wearing a collar, with “ my horn in my hand: he is not entitled to the presidency,
“ who does not keep my word.”‡

Pwyll, entering fully upon the chace, and listening to the cry of the pack, began to hear distinctly the cry of another pack, which was of a different tone from that of his own dogs, and was coming in an opposite direction. This alludes to some mystic rites, which essentially differed from those of his Eastern ancestors, Arcol and Pyr.

The strange pack pursued a stag—the aspirant—into a level open spot—the adytum—in the centre of the grove, and there threw him upon the ground. Pwyll, without regarding the stag, fixed his eyes with admiration upon the

E E 2

* Analysis, V. II. p. 360.

† ΚΥΒΕΣ, ὁι ΜΑΥΤΕΙΣ. Schol. in Lycoph. V. 459.

‡ Cadair Teyrn On. Appendix, No. 4.

dogs, which were all of a shining white hue, with red ears.—Such is the popular notion of the Welsh, respecting the colour of Cwen Annwn, the dogs of the deep—a mystical transformation of the Druids, with their white robes and red tiaras

The prince drives away the pack which had killed the stag, and calls his own dogs upon him—thus, initiating the aspirant into his own Eastern mysteries.

Whilst he is thus engaged, the master of the white pack comes up, reproves him for his uncourtly behaviour, informs him that he is a king, wearing a crown, as sovereign lord of Annwn, the deep, and that his name is Arawn, the *Arkite—this is the personage who is also styled Pendaran—lord of thunder.

Pwyll having expressed a wish to atone for his imprudent offence, and to obtain the friendship of this august stranger :

“ Behold, says Arawn, how thou mayest succeed in thy “ wishes. There is a person whose dominion is opposite to “ mine ; who makes war upon me continually : this is Havgan, “ summershine, a king also of Annwn : by delivering me
 “ from his invasions, which thou canst easily do, thou
 “ shall obtain my friendship.”

This summershine, who invades the dominions of the di-

* In the Cambrian Register, Arawn is oddly translated, “ of the silver tongue.” The word may imply eloquence ; but considering his character, I rather think it comes from ארון, Aron, an ark, or chest.

luvian patriarch, can be no other than the Solar Divinity, whose rites had begun to intermix with, and partly to supersede the more simple Arkite memorials.—Here then, we have a direct censure of that monstrous absurdity, of venerating the patriarch, in conjunction with the sun. Pwyll, or Reason, is represented as having destroyed this Apollo.

It may be conjectured, however, from the works of the British Bards, that he soon revived again, and claimed all his honours.

But to go on with the story—It was proposed that Pwyll should assume the form of Arawn; that he should immediately leave his own dominions, and proceed to Annwn, the deep, where he was to preside, in the character and person of the king, for a complete year. This must mean, that he was to be initiated into Arkite mysteries, or to pass through a representation of the same scenes, which the patriarch had experienced.—Thus Noah had presided in the ark, for precisely the same period, over the great deep, or the deluged world.

On the day that should complete the year, Pwyll was to kill the usurper, Summershine, or the Solar Idol, with a single stroke; and in the mean time, Arawn assumes the form of Pwyll, and engages to take his dominions under his special charge.

It was during this year, of the mystical deluge, that Pryderi guarded the swine of his foster-father, Arawn, or Pendaran, in the vale of the boat. His herd, therefore, was purely Arkite.

Pwyll, having determined to engage in this great enterprize, is conducted by the king to the palace of the deep—as Noah was conducted to the ark.—Being received by the whole court, without suspicion, he is attended in due form, by Arawn's ministers, and lodged in the royal bed—the Πασος, or cell of initiation—where he preserves an inviolate silence: and as a man, eminently just and upright, shews a wonderful instance of continence in his deportment towards the queen, who is the fairest woman in the world, and supposes him to be her own husband.—Such were the trials of fortitude and self-government, to which the aspirants were exposed.

On the appointed day, Pwyll kills the usurper, Summer-shine, and at the completion of the year, returns from the palace of the deep, into his own dominions, which he finds in an improved and most flourishing condition, under the administration of the great Arawn, with whom he contracts a perpetual friendship.

This part of the tale blends a mystical account of the deluge, with the history of those mysteries which were celebrated in memory of the great preservation.

The prince being now re-established in his palace, at Arberth, or high grove, provided a banquet—or solemn sacrifice—for himself and his retinue. After the first repast, the whole company walked forth to the top of the Gorsedd, or seat of presidency, which stood above the palace. Such was the quality of this seat, that whoever sat upon it, should either receive a wound, or see a miracle.

Pwyll, regardless of consequences, sat upon the mystical seat: and presently, both the prince himself, and the whole of his retinue, beheld a lady, mounted upon a horse of a pale bright colour, great, and very high.

The lady herself wore a garment, glittering like gold, and advanced along the main road, which led towards the Gorsedd. Her horse, in the opinion of all the spectators, had a slow and even pace, and was coming in the direction of the high seat.

The reader will have no difficulty in comprehending, that this splendid lady was the Iris, riding in her humid cloud; and that she was coming from the court of Arawn, upon a friendly errand. But as she was unknown to all the company now present, Pwyll sent a messenger to meet her, and learn who she was. One of his train rose up to execute the prince's order; but no sooner was he come into the road, opposite to the fair stranger, than she passed by him. He pursued her on foot with the utmost speed: but the faster he ran, the more he was distanced by the lady, though she still seemed to continue the same gentle pace, with which she had set out at first. She was then followed by a messenger upon a fleet horse, but still without any better success. The same vain experiment was tried the next day.

The prince now perceived, that there was a mystery in the appearance: yet, being persuaded, that the lady had business to communicate to some one in that field, and hoping that the honour of her commands might be reserved for himself, he gets ready his courser, and undertakes the enterprize on the third day. The lady appeared: the prince rode to meet her: she passed by him with a steady gentle pace: he followed her a full speed, but to no purpose.— Then Pwyll said—

The remainder of the story is lost; consequently, our curiosity, as to the adventures of Pwyll and the mystical lady, cannot be gratified.

But I have no doubt, that this lady in the splendid robe was the rainbow, that sacred token of reconciliation, which appeared to Noah after the deluge, and which was universally commemorated in Gentile mythology.

The mounting of her upon a horse, seems to have been a British device. Thus, we are told in the mystical poem, called The Chair of Ceridwen, that Gwydion, Hermes, formed for the goddess of the rainbow a stately steed, upon the springing grass, and with illustrious trappings.

The circumstance of the vain pursuit of this phænomenon, which seemed to move so calmly and steadily along, may remind several of my readers of a childish adventure of their own. Many a child has attempted to approach the rainbow, for the purpose of contemplating its beauty.

Upon the whole it is evident, that though the transcriber of this ancient tale may have introduced some touches of the manners of his own age, yet the main incidents faithfully delineate that Arkite mythology, which pervades the writings of the primitive Bards; at the same time that they pass a severe censure upon solar worship, as a corrupt innovation.

Having taken this view of the great swine-herd, Pryderi, or deep thought, I proceed to consider the adventures of the next in order, where we shall have some hints of the channel, by which this innovation of Sabian idolatry was introduced.

“ From Gwent, she proceeded to Dyved; and in Llonnið “ Llonwen, the pleasant spot of the tranquil lady, laid a “ grain of barley, and a pig: and the barley and swine of “ Dyved are become proverbial.

“ After this, she goes towards Arvon, and in Lleyn she “ laid a grain of rye: since which time, the best rye is pro“ duced in Lleyn and Eivionydd.

“ Proceeding from thence, to the vicinity of the cliff of “ Cyverthwch, in Eryri, she laid the cub of a wolf, and “ an eaglet. Coll gave the eagle to Brynach, a Northern “ Gwyddelian prince, of Dinas Affaraon, and the present “ proved detrimental to him. The wolf was given to Men-
 “ waed, lord of Arllechwedd.

“ These were the wolf of Menwaed, and the eagle of Bry-
 “ nach, which in after times became so famous.

“ From hence, the sow went to the black stone in Arvon, “ under which she laid a kitten, which Coll threw from the “ top of the stone into the Menai. The sons of Paluc, in “ Mona, took it up, and nursed it, to their own injury.
 “ This became the celebrated Paluc cat, one of the three “ chief molesters of Mona, which were nursed within the “ island. The second of these molesters was Daronwy; and
 “ the third was Edwin, the Northumbrian king.”

I should not have exhibited this fantastical story, were I not persuaded that it contains some important tradition respecting the progress of superstition in our country, of which no other account is to be found and that the greatest part of it may be explained.

Before we attend to the mystical sow, and her ill-omened progeny, it may be proper to take some notice of her guardian.

Rod, the son of the rod of terrors, or of religious awe, the hero of this singular tale, cannot be regarded as an individual person. He is an ideal character, implying a principal agent, or the aggregate of agents, in conducting a particular mode of superstition.

Coll is repeatedly mentioned in the mythological Triads. He is there classed with the great deified patriarch, Hu Gadarn, as one of three personages, who conferred distinguished benefits upon the Cymry nation. He has the credit of having first introduced wheat and barley into Britain, where only rye and oats had been known before his time.* Hence it appears, that he must have been a great favourite of Ceres, the goddess of cultivation.

He is again brought forwards, as one of the three great presidents of mysteries.† And here, we must regard his doctrine and institutes, as comprehending the mystical theology and rites, which prevailed in a certain age, or over certain districts of these islands.

From a collation of the passages in which this notice occurs, it may be deduced, that there had been three distinct modes, or stages of mysticism, amongst the Britons.

That of Menu, the son of the three loud calls, and of

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 67.

† Ibid. p. 7, 71, 77.

Uthyr Bendragon, or the wonderful supreme leader, was the first of these.

That of Coll, the son of Collvrewi, and of Eiddilic Corr, or Gwyddelin Corr, constituted the second: and this agreed with the mode of Rhuddlwm Gawr, or the red, bony giant.

And that of Math, the son of Mathonwy, Drych eil Cibddar, and Gwydion ab Don was the third.

The first of these modes or stages, I suppose to have been that corruption of the patriarchal religion, or the more simple Arkite theology, which originally prevailed amongst the Cymry, and of which we have already had some hints, under the characters of Pwyll and Pryderi.

As to the second; when we recollect, that Coll first began the superintendance of his mystical sow in Cornwall, which either was one of the Cassiterides of the ancients, or else certainly carried on an intercourse with those tin islands, it may be conjectured, that the red bony giant, the original introducer of this superstition, and who is represented as the uncle and mystical preceptor of Coll, was no other than the Phœnician, or red merchant, half Canaanite, and half Edomite, who traded with the tin islands. And as this became the system of Corr, the Coraniad, or Belgian, and also of Gwyddelin, the Gwyddelian, whom our writers regard as of the same family with the other, it appears to be the meaning of the Triads, that the Belgæ of Britain and Ireland adopted the mode of this stranger. Of the introduction of the same mysticism into Wales, and immediately from Cornwall, we have a more detailed account in the adventures of Coll and his wonderful sow. This superstition contained memorials of the deluge; but it verged more strongly towards Sabian idolatry.

The third mode, namely, that of Math, Drych, and Gwydion, seems to have been a mixture of the two former; that is, of the superstition of the original Cymry, and the more idolatrous rites of the Phœnicians: or that confusion of principles which we find in the old British Bards, and which Mr. Bryant has detected amongst many ancient nations.

Coll is, then, the great agent in the adventitious branch of the Druidical religion.

Having thus seen what is meant by his character, we will proceed to the history of his sow: and we shall find, that however absurd it may be in the literal sense, great part of it will admit of explanation upon mythological principles.

The name of this mystical animal was Hênwen, old lady, a proper title for the great mother, Da-Mater, or Ceres, to whom the sow was sacred. But Ceres, or the great mother, as Mr. Bryant has proved, was the genius of the ark. Agreeably to this decision, it has occurred to our countrymen, that under this allegory of a sow, we must understand the history of a ship. Upon the story of Coll and his mystical charge, Mr. Owen remarks, that under this extraordinary recital, there seems to be preserved the record of the appearance of a strange ship on the coasts, under the appellation of a sow: and that it was probably a Phœnician ship, which imported into the island the various things here mentioned.*

And again in his Dictionary, under the word Hwch, a sow, the same author tells us—"It has been also used as an epithet for a ship, for the same reason as Banw is applied to a pig, and to a coffer; the abstract meaning of the word being characteristic of the form of both. There is a tradition in Monmouthshire, that the first corn sown in Wales was at Maes Gwenith, Wheatfield, in that county, and was brought there by a ship; which, in a Triad alluding to the same event, is called Hwch"—that is, a sow.

That this tale alludes to the history of a ship or vessel, there can be no doubt: and we first hear of its being in Cornwall, that part of Britain which is supposed to have had a peculiar intercourse with the Phœnicians.

But, in a literal sense, wolves and eagles must have been very useless, as well as unnecessary, articles of importation to the ancient Britons. This was a sacred ship. Its cargo consisted, not in common merchandise, but in religious symbols and apparatus. And there is every reason to conclude, that it was itself a symbol of the ark.

I have already observed, that the name of this mystical vehicle, old lady, was a proper epithet for the great mother—the ark.

The depositing of the various kinds of grain, points to the office of Ceres, who was the genius of the ark; to the British Kéd, who passed through the deluge, stored with corn; and to the character of Ceridwen, who is styled Ogyrven Amhad, the goddess of various seeds, and whose mysteries were Arkite.

* Camb. Biog. V. Coll.

The whimsical use of the verb dodwi, to lay, as a hen lays her eggs, when applied to the parturition of the mystical sow, or ship, cannot be accounted for, till we recollect, that our Arkite goddess is styled and described as a hen.

And this symbolical sow, like the Argo of antiquity, proceeds by land, as well as by sea, attended by her mystical priest.

The place from whence she began her progress, and the persons to whom she belonged, with equal clearness point out her mythological character. For this sow, we are told, was the property of Dallwyr, the blind men, or Miszi of Dallben, the mystagogue; and was guarded in Glyn Dallwyr, the glen, or vale, of the mystics, in Cornwall.

To this spot she had been confined during a considerable period; for the Britons were aware of her being there, and were jealous of the innovations which she might introduce. Hence the old prophecy, that Britain would be injured by her progeny. She was, therefore, of foreign extraction; and the doctrines and rites of her priests differed from the more simple religion of the natives. Wherefore, as soon as she began to propagate, or produce converts in the country, the mythological Arthur, the mystical head of the native, and hitherto patriarchal religion, collected the forces of the island, in order to exterminate her race; but the design proved abortive—the novel system gained ground.

Let us now consider the various deposits of this mystical vehicle.

The first consisted of three grains of wheat, and a Triad of bees. The wheat, every one knows to be the fruit of Ceres: and in Britain, the person who aspired to the mysteries of that goddess, was transformed into a mystical grain of pure wheat. And as to the bees of mythology, the great analyzer of ancient tradition proves, from a multitude of circumstances, that the Melissæ, or bees, were certainly female attendants in the Arkite temples.*

The appropriation of this title to the priestesses of Ceres, Mr. Bryant, as usual, attributes to an error of the Greeks in the interpretation of a foreign term. If this be allowed, the same blunders constantly pervading the sacred vocabularies of the Greeks and Britons, might be insisted upon as arguments, that the latter borrowed their theology immediately from the former, which I think was not the case in general. The history of the provident bee, the architect of her own commodious cell, in which she weathers out the destructive winter, might supply another reason for making her the symbol of an Arkite priestess.

But passing over our author's etymologies, and taking along with us his historical deductions, it will appear, that the sacred ship which brought the bees, was a representative of the ark. For the same distinguished writer, who first proved that Ceres was the genius of the ark, has also shewn, that she was styled Melissa, or the bee, and that the Melissæ were her priestesses.

F F

* Analysis, V. II, p. 337.

So that in this British tale, we have the record of an Arkite temple, founded in Monmouthshire by a colony of priests, which came from Cornwall, with an establishment of three Arkite ministers.

The grain of barley, and the pig, or one of her own species, which the mystical sow deposited in the pleasant spot of the tranquil lady, in Demetia, or Pembrokeshire, amounts to nearly the same thing.

The next remarkable deposit, consisted in the cub of a wolf, and the eaglet.

The wolf of mythology, according to Mr. Bryant, related to the worship of the sun.* The eagle also, he tells us, was one of the insignia of Egypt, and was particularly sacred to the sun. It was called Ait, or Aeros; and Homer alludes to the original meaning of the word, when he terms the eagle Aeros; αἰθων.†

Hence it appears, that the Arkite mysteries of this old lady were intimately blended with an idolatrous worship of the sun—that usurper, whom we have seen the great Arawn king of the deep, so anxious to remove.

* Analysis V. I. p. 78.

† Ibid. p. 19.

The eagle and the wolf were deposited in Eryri, or Snowdon; and Coll is said to have presented the former to a Northern prince, and the latter to a lord of Arlechwedd: which must be understood to mean, that these symbols of solar worship were introduced from Cornwall, by a circuitous route, into the regions of Snowdon, and from thence into North Britain, and Arlechwedd.

The place where the eagle and wolf were deposited, deserves attention. It was on the top of Rhiw Gyverthwch, the panting cliff, in Snowdon, and in a structure called Dinas Affaraon, or Pharaon, the city of the higher powers.* The scite was upon the road from the promontory of Lleyn, to that part of the coast which is opposite to Mona, for the mystical sow takes it in her way. Hence it seems to have been the same which is now known by the name of Y Ddinas, the city, thus described by the Annotator upon Camden.

“ On the top of Penmaen, stands a lofty and impregnable hill, called Braich y Ddinas (the ridge of the city), where we find the ruinous walls of an exceeding strong fortification, encompassed with a triple wall; and within each wall, the foundation of, at least, a hundred towers, all round, and of equal bigness, and about six yards diameter within the walls. The walls of this Dinas were, in most places, two yards thick, and in some about three. This castle seems, while it stood, impregnable, there being no way to offer any assault to it; the hill being so

F F 2

* Pharaon seems to be the British name of the Cabiri, their priests, called Pheryll, were skilled in metallurgy, and are said to have possessed certain books upon mysterious subjects.

“ very high, steep, and rocky, and the walls of such “ strength.—At the summit of this rock, within the in- “ nermost wall, there is a well, which affords plenty of “ water in the dryest summer.—The greatness of the “ work, shews that it was a princely fortification, strength“ ened by nature and workmanship, seated on the top of “ one of the highest mountains of that part of Snowdon,
 “ which lies towards the sea.”*

The temple of Ceres, in the Gyylchi, is only about the distance of a mile from this place. This stately pile, which has left no other local memorial of its greatness, but the emphatical name—“ The city,” must have been, as I conjecture, the celebrated Dinas Pharäon, in the rocks of Snowdon, which had also the name of Dinas Emrys, or the ambrosial city. This was famous, not only for the wolf and eagle, which were deposited by the mystical sow, but also for certain dragons,† which appeared in the time of Beli, the son of Manhogan, or, as we are otherwise told, in the time of Prydain, the son of Aedd the Great ‡—that is, in the age of the solar divinity. In this Dinas, the dragons were lodged by a son of Beli, or child of the sun; and the destiny of Britain was supposed to depend upon the due concealment of the mystery.§

* Gibson's Camden Col. 804.

† W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 59, 65.

‡ Beli is represented as the father of the brave Cassivellaunus, and the son of Manhogan, radiated with splendour. But Beli and Prydain are titles of the Helio-arkite divinity. See Append. No. 11, where he is addressed by both these names,

§ W. Archaiol. V. II p. 9, 11, 66, 78.

As to these dragons, the reader has seen that they were harnessed in the car of the British, as well as of the Greek Ceres: and more than this, their general connexion with solar superstition is acknowledged by the Welsh themselves: * hence it appears, that the old lady, who wandered from the mystic vale in Cornwall, to the regions of Snowdon, imported a mixture of Arkite and Sabian idolatry.

But let us come to the last deposit of the mystical sow, namely, the kitten, which was laid under the black stone, that is, in a cell, or Kistvaen, in Arvon, from whence the mystagogue cast it into the Menai. It was taken up out of this strait, or river, and became the Paluc cat of Mona.

Isis, the Arkite goddess, was sometimes represented under the figure of a cat, because that animal, by the voluntary dilatation and contraction of the pupils of its eyes, imitates the phases of the moon, which was also a symbol of Isis: and Mr. Bryant thinks, that the very names of Menai and Monu have a pointed reference to the worship of the lunar Arkite goddess.

But Paluc cat is spoken of as a large and fierce creature, of the feline kind. Mr. Owen thinks it was a tyger. It is often mentioned, as one of the molestations of Mona; and as all the symbols imported by the mystical sow, were regarded as pernicious innovations, by those who adhered to the primitive religion of their country, the destroying of this cat was esteemed a meritorious act. Though it is described as an animal, it seems to have been only an idol, and attended by foreign uinisters. Taliesin calls it Cath Vraith, the spotted cat, and thus denounces its fate—

* Thus Mr. Owen, in his Dictionary, explains the word—“DRAIG, a generative principle, or procreator; a fiery serpent; a dragon; the supreme. “Dreigiau, silent lightnings. In the mythology of the primitive world, the serpent is universally the symbol of the sun, under various appellations, but of the same import as the Draig, Adon, Addon; Bel and Bäl amongst the “Cymry.”

Ys trabluddir y Gath Vraith
A'i hanghyvieithon *—

“The spotted cat shall be disturbed, together with her
“men of a foreign language.”

It should seem, from another passage, to have been a symbol of the sun: for Taliesin, who often speaks in the person and character of that luminary, mentions as one of his transformations—

Bum Cath Benfrith ar driphren †

“I have been a cat with a spotted head, upon a tripod.”

Upon the whole, we may suppose it to have been the figure of some animal of the cat kind, which was deemed sacred, either to the Helio-arkite god, or the Lunar-arkite goddess, or to both, as it was a male and a female; ‡ and therefore, at all events, a symbol of the mixed superstition.

But as Coll, the guardian of the old lady, learned his mystic lore from the red giant, who resided in a nook of Cornwall, a region which had early intercourse with stran-

* W. Archaiol. p. 73.

† Ibid. p. 44.

‡ Cath Vraith, and Cath Ben Vrish.

gers, particularly with the Phœnician, or red nation; as the Britons had been jealous of the mystical sow, or sacred ship, which introduced the symbols here enumerated; and as the wolf, the eagle, and the cat are mentioned with disapprobation, as things which proved injurious to those who received them, I conclude that these symbols, and the idolatry which they implied, were of foreign growth, and did not pertain to the religion of the primitive British nation.

Having now dismissed Coll and his old lady, I proceed to consider the history of the third mighty swineherd, who is better known to the reader of English romance by the name of Sir Tristram.

“ The third swineherd was Trystan, proclaimer, the son
 “ of Tallwch, the overwhelming, who kept the swine of “ March, the horse, the son of Meirchiawn, the horses of “ justice, whilst the swineherd was carrying a message to “ Essyllt, spectacle, to appoint an assignation with her.

“ In the mean time, Arthur, March, Cai, and Bedwyr, “ went forth against him upon a depredatory expedition.
 “ But they failed in their design of procuring as much as “ a single pig, either by donation, by purchase, by strata-“ gem, by force, or by stealth.

“ These were called the mighty swineherds, because nei“ ther stratagem nor force could extort from them one of “ the swine which were under their care, and which they

“ restored, together with the full increase of the herd, to their right owners.”*

This story also describes the meddling with some foreign mysteries, which had been introduced into Cornwall, and from thence extended into other districts: but these mysteries were regarded as unlawful and depraved; for the intercourse of Trystan with his mistress, Essyllt, was both adulterous and incestuous. As I have hinted above, it seems to allude to the incorporation of the primitive religion of the Britons with the rites of the Phœnician sow.

By the character of Trystan, we are to understand, as his name imports, a herald of mysteries: and hence a representative of the mystical system, which prevailed at a certain period, or in a certain state of the British hierarchy.

The memorials of this character in the mythological Triads, are many and various.

We are told, that of the three heralds of the island of Britain, the first was Greidiawl, the ardent, or, as he is otherwise called, Gwgon Gwron, the severely energetic, herald of Envael, the acquisition of life, the son of Adran, second distribution. The second herald was Gwair Gwrhyd-vawr, renovation of great energy: and the third was Trystan, the proclaimer, the son of Talkwch, the overwhelming—that is, the deluge. And it is added, that such was the privilege of these heralds, that none could resist their authority in the island of Britain, without becoming outlaws.†

* W. Archæol. V. II. p. 6, 20, 72, 77.

† Ibid. p. 5, 63, 77.

The very names and connexions of these heralds declare, that each of their modes was Arkite, or referable to the history of the deluge, whatever they may have included besides: and their authority is precisely the same which Cæsar assigns to the Druidical chair.

We have, in the next place, some intimation of the dignity with which these characters supported their high office, when we are told, that of the three diademed chiefs of the island of Britain, the first was Huail, vicegerent of Hu, the son of Caw, the inclosure, also called Gwair, renovation, the son of Gwestyl, the great tempest. The second was Cai, association, the son of Cynyn Cov, the origin of memorial, surnamed Cainvarvog, or with the splendid beard: and the third was Trystan, the son of Tallwch. And Bedwyr, Phallus, the son of Pedrog, the quadrangle, wore his diadem, as presiding over the three.*

After this, we are informed of the constancy and resolution with which the authority and dignity of these characters were asserted. For Eiddilic Corr, the same as Coll; Gwair and Trystan, were the three determined personages, whom no one could divert from their purpose.†

Trystan is again introduced as hierophant; for the three knights, who had the conducting of mysteries in the court of the mythological Arthur, were Menu, son of Teingwaedd, or the three loud calls, Trystan, the son of Tallwch, and Cai, the son of Cynyn, with the splendid beard.‡

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 5, 12.

† Ibid. p. 19, 69.

‡ Ibid. p. 80.

From these particulars it may be collected, that Trystan is a personification of the great moving power, in the religious establishment of the Britons, during a certain period of their history: and hence it may be inferred, that his amorous intercourse with Essyllt, spectacle, the wife, otherwise called the daughter, of March, horse, the son of Meirchiawn, his uncle,* is to be understood in a mystical sense.

We also read of Trystan, the son of this March, who seems to be the same personage, and is ranked with Rhyhawt eil Morgant, the son of Adras, and Dalldav, mystagogue, the son of Cynin Cov, principle of memorial, as a compeer in the court of the mythological Arthur.†

Such being the mystical character of Trystan, let us now look for the owner of the herd which he superintended, and the husband or father of Essyllt, his beautiful paramour.

This personage was a prince of some part of Cornwall; and his singular name Horse, the son of the horses of justice, must undoubtedly be referred to the Hippos, or horse of the ancient mythologists, which Mr. Bryant proves to have meant the ark. He imputes the name, as usual, to an error of the Greeks: but it is strange, that these errors should be constantly and accurately translated into the language of our British forefathers.

But let us hear our learned author.

* W. Archaiol. p. 13, 73.

† Ibid. p. 19s 74, 80.

“ I cannot help surmising, that the horse of Neptune “ was a mistaken emblem; and that the ancients, in the “ original history, did not refer to that animal. What the “ Ἴππος alluded to in the early mythology, was certainly a “ float, or ship; the same as the Ceto (the ark): for, in “ the first place, the Ceto was denominated Hippos:
 “ Ἴππων, τον μεγαν θαλασσιον ιχθυον, i. e. the Ceto, or whale. Se“ condly, it is remarkable, that the Hippos was certainly “ called Σκαφιος και σκυφιος.* I therefore cannot help think“ ing, that the supposed horse of Neptune, as it has so “ manifest a relation to the Ceto and the Scyphus, must “ have been an emblem of the like purport; and that it “ had, originally, a reference to the same history, to which “ the Scyphus and Ceto related (that is, the ark). The “ fable of the horse certainly arose from a misprision of “ terms, though the mistake be as old as Homer. The “ goddess Hippa is the same as Hippos, and relates to the “ same history. There were many symbols of an horse.
 “ The history of Pegasus, the winged horse, is probably
 “ of the same purport. So does Palæphatus, a judicious “ writer, interpret it—Ὄνομα δ’ ἦν τῷ πλοίῳ, Πηγαῖος. This Hip-
 “ pos was, in consequence, said to have been the offspring
 “ of Poseidon and Da-mater.”†

The March, or horse of the British mythologists, must evidently be referred to the same Arkite history, which is here intimated by Mr. Bryant: and not only so, but also, as I shall prove in the course of this section, the horse was, amongst our ancestors, a favourite symbol of a sacred ship.

* Schol. in Lycoph. V. 766:

† Analysis, V. II. p. 408.

The mystical Prince of Cornwall is styled the son of the horses of justice; probably, with allusion to the just patriarch: and, in order the more forcibly to mark his character, he is represented as a master of ships, and, in this capacity, classed with Gwenwynwyn, thrice fair, the son of Nâv, the lord, a title of the Diluvian patriarch; and with Geraint ab Erbin, vessel of the high chiefs.*

And as March was a mystical character, we must also search the Bardic pedigree for the lady, whether his wife or his daughter, of whom Trystan was so greatly enamoured.

We are told, that the three unchaste matrons, of Druidical mystery, were daughters of one father, namely, Cul Vanawyd Prydain, which implies, the person occupying the narrow spot, in the waters of Britain. This very title has an aspect to Arkite mystery. The Diluvian god, or sacred bull, had his residence in such a spot.†

The first of these three sisters was Essyllt, spectacle, sur-named Vyngwen, or with the white mane, the concubine of Trystan, the herald, the son of Tallwch, the deluge.

The second was Penarwen, the lady with the splendid head, the wife of Owen, the son of Urien.‡

* W. Archæol. V. II. p. 5, 13, 68.

There was a prince called Geraint ab Erbin, in the beginning of the sixth century: but the name itself is borrowed from mythology, and the Geraint of the Welsh tales is a mystical character.—

See Ed. Llwyd's Archæol. p. 265.

† See the second section of this Essay.

‡ The character assigned to this prince in the Welsh tales is mythological.

The third sister was Bân, the maid Κορη, the wife of the flame-bearer.*

It is pretty clear, that these three daughters of Manawydd, refer to three mystical modes of the same origin, and all Arkite: and I think, the reason why they are described as unchaste, was, either because they were communicated to persons of different nations, or because they included some foreign and adulterated rites, which had not been acknowledged by the more simple religion of the primitive Bards.

Our present business is only with Essyllt, whose name Spectacle, or subject of steady contemplation, manifestly implies some mystical exhibition. And as she was the wife of the horse, so she is described as having a white mane. She was, therefore, a mare; but the aspirant, Taliesin, saw the British Ceres in the form of a proud and wanton mare; Mr. Bryant also acknowledges Hippa, the mare, as one of the most ancient goddesses of the gentile world, and particularly informs us, that the Arkite Ceres was distinguished by that title, and that even her priestesses were called Hippai, mares.†

He seems to have occupied a distinguished place in the mystical drama.—See the story told of him and the lady of the fountain.

In the red book of Jesus College, Oxford, it is mentioned by Ed. Llwyd. Archæol. p. 265.

* W. Archæol. V. II. p. 14. 73.

Ida, the Northumbrian King, is supposed to be described, under the name of Flamebearer. If such be the meaning of the term in this passage, I should conceive that Bun may allude to the mysteries of Isis, which Tacitus remarked amongst the ancient Germans, and which this pagan prince may have celebrated in Britain.

† Analysis, V. II. p. 27, &c.

Hence we perceive, that it was of this goddess and her sacred rites, that our British Herald and Mystagogue was so deeply enamoured: and that the herd, which he superintended, consisted of her priests and votaries.

Here it may be remarked, that the character of Trystan seems to refer to a period somewhat more recent than that of Coll: for the former was entrusted with the care of the mystical sow, before she had farrowed, or produced vataries upon British ground: but here, the pigs are already produced and multiplied, though they are still objects of persecution, to the mystical Arthur and his heroes, or the hierarchy of the native Britons. It may also deserve notice, that Coll is uniformly described as a foreigner, who introduced something into Britain, but Trystan was a native, and of some mystical eminence, before he tampered with the swine, or the consort of the Cornish horse.

The notices which the triads have preserved, upon the subject of the celebrated Trystan, are undoubtedly, abstracts of some old mystical tales, which were current amongst the early Britons. And although the tales which more immediately regarded the character now before us, have disappeared in the Welsh language, it is evident that they must have existed, and that they formed the basis of certain romantic histories, of the famous knight, Sir Tristram, which are still extant in French and English.

Of these, the Metrical Romance, written by Thomas, of Ercildoune, and lately published by Mr. Scott, from the Auchinleck MS. is worthy of special notice, as having preserved much genuine British mythology, though blended with the fanciful embellishments of the thirteenth century. I shall, therefore, remark a few particulars of the story.

This author changes the name of Trystan, the proclaimer, into Tristrem, and Trem Trist, which in the Welsh language implies a woeful countenance; a designation too whimsical to have escaped the notice of the humourous Cervantes, who probably had seen this romance in French or Spanish.

The father of Sir Tristrem is here called Rouland, which seems to be a mere French translation of his British name Tallwch, and the Irish Tuileach, a rolling or overwhelming flood.

His mother is Blanche Flour, the white flower, the sister of King Mark, who is the March or horse of the Triads. This lady is certainly the lovely Flûr of British mythology, of whom the illustrious Cassivellaunus was so deeply enamoured, that he undertook an expedition into Gaul, attended by the gods of Britain, in order to redress her wrongs; and by this act, provoked the resentment of Julius Cæsar.*

The character of Flûr imports that token, or pledge of union, amongst the professors of Druidism which in-

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 3. 10. 13. 60.

Caswallon, the son of Beli was attended by Gwenwynwyn, thrice fair, and Gwanar, the ruler, who were sons of Lli-aws, impeller of the waves, son of Nwyvre, the firmament, by Arianrhod, goddess of the silver wheel (the Iris) daughter of Beli, the sun.

duced the Britons to assist their brethern of Gaul, as related by Cæsar, and thus furnished that great commander with a pretext for the invasion of this Island.

The emblematical Flûr or flower, which this fraternity exhibited, was, I imagine, that of the white trefoil or shamrock. This was a sacred plant amongst the Bards,* displaying the mysterious three in one, the great secret inculcated by the very form of their Triads and Tribanau. Hence we are told, that wherever their goddess Olwen, the great mother, trod upon the ground, four white trefoils immediately sprung up.†

Flûr is the daughter of Mygnach, a mystical character, the son of Mydnaw, the mover of the ship. In a dialogue which he holds with Taliesin, he comes forward like Arawn, the king of the deep, with his white dogs, or ministering Druids; his residence is in Caer Sëon, in the mystic island, and the chief of the Bards reveres his Gorsedd or throne.‡

By the birth of Sir Tristrem, from the rolling flood, and the symbol of union, the original narrator seems to have implied, that he was a legitimate son of the Arkite religion.

After the untimely death of these, his natural parents,

* See the poem called the Chair of Taliesin.

Every leaf of this plant is naturally impressed with a pale figure of a crescent, which was also a sacred symbol amongst the Druids, and other heathens.

† Owen's Cam. Biog. V. Olwen.

From Maill, the name of this plant, we may derive Cy-vaill, an associate—one who mutually exhibits the Maill.

‡ Appendix, No. 8.

our young hero is committed to the care of a prince, named Rohand, who is a mortal enemy of Duke Morgan, son of the sea, a neighbouring potentate. Both these personages are found in the Triads; but with characters somewhat differently drawn. Morgan, sur-named Mwynvawr, or most courteous, the son of Adras (Adraste?) was one of the royal knights in the court of the mythological Arthur.* And the Rohand of the tale, is Rhyhawd, the man of excess, styled Eil Morgant, the successor of Morgant; and this character, as his name implies, carried his mytical lore beyond legitimate bounds. The triads rank him with Dalldav, Mystagogue and March, the horse, as a compeer, in the court of the same Arthur.

He is also styled Overvardd, or one who corrupted the Bardic system with a mixture of foreign fable. This is the delineation of a Hierophant, who made some innovation in the Druidical mode.

This Rohand, anxious for the safety of his charge, directed his wife to feign a second delivery, adopted the infant as his son, and called him by the inverted name of Trem Trist. He took the greatest care of his education, and had him instructed in all the fashionable arts and sciences, amongst which, the mysteries of hunting are eminently discriminated.

Under this allegory, which is precisely in the style of the British tales, we have the history of Tristrem's initiation into the mongrel rites of Rhyhawd.—Thus the aspirant, Taliesin, was born again of Ceridwen, and instructed in her mystical hall; and thus the celebration of mysteries is represented in the story of Pwyll, under the image of hunting: but the new lore, communicated to Tristrem, differed from that of his parents, therefore his name was inverted.

G G

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 74. Triad, 118.

We are afterwards told of a strange ship, which appeared upon the coast of Cornwall. The English translator, a rhymers of the thirteenth century, naturally calls it Norwegian, but as the story is mythological, the ship must have belonged to a people who visited Cornwall, during the early ages of mythology. This vessel was freighted with hawks, which Tristrem won at chess, and distributed amongst his friends. Here it may be remarked, that no ship ever sailed with such a cargo; but the British Ceres transformed herself into a hawk;* and this bird was a sacred symbol in Eastern mythology. It occurs frequently in Egyptian sculpture, as the favourite representative of Isis.

Tristrem is now conducted to the court of Cornwall, and by means of a ring, the glain, or insigne of a Druid, which he had received of his mother, is recognized as the nephew of March, knighthed, or admitted to the dignities of the Bardic order; and advanced to the command of an army, or made high priest, having fifteen attendant knights assigned to him, all of them bearing boar's heads.—The meaning of this allegory is evidently the same as that of the Triads, which represent him as a great swine herd.

Invested with this power, Sir Tristrem sallies forth, to attack Duke Morgan, the president of the older system of Druidism; kills his adversary, and confers his conquered dominions upon Rohand, or Rhyhawd, the corrupter of

* Hanes Taliesin.

Bardic mystery. Hence the Triads represent Rhyhawd as Eil Morgan, or successor of Morgan.

We next hear of our hero's combat with a champion of Ireland, whom he kills in the field: but at the same time, he is pierced with a poisonous weapon. The wound proving incurable, renders his person so disgusting, that he withdraws from society. In mere despair he goes on board a ship, which he commits to the mercy of the wind and waves; but such is his good fortune, that after tossing about for some time, he finds himself safe arrived in the port of Dublin. Here again, I suspect the rhymer has modernized the geography of his tale. The Queen of the country, however, being admirably skilled in medicine, heals the wound of our hero. He is called to court.

The king's daughter, the beautiful Ysonde, the Essyllt, or Spectacle of the Triads, is committed to his care as a pupil, and instructed in music and poetry, and in every becoming branch of his mystic lore.

Upon his return to Cornwall, Sir Tristrem reports the beauty and accomplishments of his fair pupil to King Mark, who conceives a violent passion for the princess, and commissions his nephew to return to Ireland in his name, and demand her in marriage.

Through a series of romantic adventures, the hero of Cornwall arrives at the accomplishment of his commission. The princess is entrusted to his care; and they set sail.

At their departure, the queen mother, anxious to secure the happiness of the married couple, prepared and delivered to Brengwain, Ysonde's favourite damsel, a drink of might, with directions, that it should be divided between the bride and bride-groom, on the wedding evening. But fortune decided otherwise. During a contrary wind, when Tristrem was faint with heat and thirst from the fatigue of rowing, Ysonde called for some liquor to refresh him, and Brengwain, inadvertently brought the fatal drink of might, of which Tristrem and Ysonde having partaken, they inbibed the sudden and resistless passion, which death alone could overcome. Even a dog, named Hodain, who licked the cup after it was set down, felt its invincible power, and became their inseparable companion.

The drink of might which is here mentioned, must have been the ΚΥΚΕΩΝ, or mystical potion of Ceres, agreeing with the preparation of the sacred cauldron of Ceridwen, and with the wine and bragget of the Welsh Bards, which was administered to the aspirants upon their admission to the mysteries; and hence represented, as communicating all the benefits of initiation. Brengwain was certainly the Bronwen, or Proserpine of the Britons, whom Brân, the Raven had carried into Ireland, along with the mystical cauldron, and espoused to a sovereign of that country, distinguished by the remarkable name of Math-olwch, form of worship.

Hodain, corn shooting into the ear, is the attribute of Ceres, whose priests Taliesin styles Hodigion, bearers of ears of corn.

The Hodain of this tale seems to have been one of those priests, though he is described as a dog: for heathen priests were called ΚΥΚΕΣ; the British Ceres transformed herself into a bitch; and in the tale of Pwyll, the priesthood are represented under the character of white dogs.

Ysonde, notwithstanding her intrigue with Sir Tristrem, becomes the Queen of Cornwall: but not long afterwards, an Irish nobleman, her old admirer, arrives at the court of Mark, in the disguise of a minstrel, obtains possession of her person, and conveys her into his ship. I apprehend the import of this incident to be, that the Belgæ, or other inhabitants of ancient Ireland, were initiated into the mystical rites which prevailed in Cornwall.

But Sir Tristrem recovers the fair Ysonde, and restores her to the king, taking care, however, to devise means of keeping up a private intercourse with her. One of the stratagems to which he had recourse for this purpose, is very remarkable. Being separated from his mistress, he contrived to correspond with her by means of small bits of wood, on which were engraved secret characters, and which were floated down a small stream, which ran through the orchard of Ysonde's country seat.

This is a clear allusion to the practice of sortilege, by which the Druids consulted their gods.

The bits of wood were the Coelbreni, omen-sticks, or points of sprigs, so often mentioned by the Bards; or the lots, cut into tallies out of the shoot of a fruit-bearing tree, and distinguished by mysterious characters, as Tacitus has accurately described them. As to the orchard, we may either interpret it the Druidical grove, in which those fruit-bearing trees must have been cultivated, or else we may restrain the meaning to the lots themselves, which were cut out of that grove. And it is observable, that the hierophant, Merddin the Caledonian, describes the whole circle of Druidical mysticism, under the allegory of an orchard, containing 147 fruit-bearing trees, which were perfect tallies with each other.

Sir Tristrem, after this, is made high constable, or, as the Triads express it, Prív Húd, president of mystery: and, as a privilege annexed to this office, sleeps in the queen's apartment. Here he takes some unwarrantable liberties; in consequence of which, he is banished the court of Cornwall, and retires into Wales, where he undertakes the defence of Triamour, king of the country, against the usurpations of the giant Urgan, whom he kills in single combat. Triamour bestows the sovereignty of Wales upon his protector, together with a little dog, which was spotted with red, blue, and green; but our hero immediately restores the crown to Blanche Flour, the king's daughter, and sends the dog as a present to Ysonde.

Triamour seems to be the Triathmor of the Irish, in which the th are not audible. And the title implies a great king, hog, sow, wave, or hill:* so that it is a term of sufficient mystical latitude, to denote either the president of the Welsh Druids, the chief object of their superstition, or their elevated place of worship.

Urgan is, probably, the Gwrgi of the Triads, a mystical cannibal; that is, a priest, or an idol, who delighted in human sacrifices. And here it may be remarked, that the character of a mythological giant, for the most part, implies the idea of impiety or heterodoxy. Hence we find, that the courteous knight of one tale, is not unfrequently the atrocious giant of another. Such circumstances comply with the various opinions of the several narrators.

* This ambiguity arises from a general principle, which discovers itself in every page of the Irish vocabulary; namely, the appropriating of the same term to every object which presents the same general idea; and the primary and abstract meaning of Triath happens to be, bulkiness, eminence, or prominence.

Tristrem's obtaining and immediately resigning the sovereignty of Wales, may imply, that his system was introduced into that country, but not established there. And it is observable, that the daughter of Triamour, as well as the mother of the Cornish champion, was named Blanche Flour, that is, the white trefoil, or shamrock, the mystical pledge of union.

The little dog was a priest; and his spots of red, blue, and green, seem to import those insignia, called Gleiniau, which were of the colours here specified.

“ These Gemmæ Anguinæ are small glass anulets, commonly about as wide as our finger-rings, but much thicker; of a green colour, usually, though some of them are blue, and others curiously waved with blue, red, and white.”*

Mr. Owen says, they were worn by the different orders of Bards, each having his appropriate colour. The blue ones belonged to the presiding Bards, the white to the Druids, the green to the Ovates, and the three colours blended, to the disciples.† It should seem, then, that this party-coloured dog was either a disciple, or a graduate, in the several orders.

* Gibson's Camden, Col. 815.

† Owen's Dict. V. Glarn.

Tristrem, upon his return to Cornwall, renews his intimacy with the queen; in consequence of which, they are both banished the court. The lovers retire into a forest, where they discover a cavern, that had been constructed in old time by the giants. Here they reside, and subsist upon the venison taken by their mystical dogs. The king having surprised them, when asleep, in this cavern, with a drawn sword between them, is persuaded of their innocence, and restores them both into favour.

This forest was the Druidical grove; the cavern, a sacred cell, which had been constructed by the giants, or professors of a different mode; the dogs were the priests; the deer their noviciates; and the sword, that weapon which was drawn against the irregular disciple, and religiously sheathed again in the solemn meetings of the Bards, upon the stone which covered the sacred cell.*

Our unfortunate hero again falling into disgrace, upon the score of his old offence, is obliged to fly. Having traversed several countries, he enters, at last, into the service of Florentin—some relation of Flur—Duke of Brittany, who had a daughter, named Ysonde, more chaste, and scarcely less beautiful than the beloved Queen of Cornwall. Tristrem marries this princess; but his ring, or sacred amulet, having reminded him of his former attachment, he treats his lovely bride with absolute neglect.

This Armorican Ysonde, Essyllt, or spectacle, presents a tradition of some more simple religious mysteries, which anciently prevailed in Gaul, but which did not satisfy the debauched taste of the Cornish hierophant; and the next incident gives us a hint of the particular defect which he found in it.

* See Appendix, No. 3, and Owen's Dict. V. Crcmlech.

As a nuptial present, Tristrem had received a tract of country immediately adjoining the territories of a ferocious giant, named Beliagog: but this was accompanied with a strict injunction from Florentin, that he should abstain from hunting—celebrating his mysteries—upon the lands of that monster, who was brother to Morgan, Urgan, and Moraunt. The champion of Cornwall, regardless of this injunction, hunts upon the lands of Beliagog, encounters the giant in person, disables him in combat, and makes him his vassal.

As Beli was a name of the sun, so I think Beliagog may imply, what would be expressed in Welsh, Beli a gwg, the severe or frowning Beli; the Belenus of the more recent Druids of Armorica, whom Ausonius expressly identifies with Phæbus, or Apollo. So that the giant, so greatly abhorred by the primitive hierophants of Brittany, though connected with the Cornish superstition, was the solar divinity. And it is observable throughout the Triads, and the mythological tales, that whenever the corruption of Druidism is described, there is always some allusion to the solar worship, or to those symbols by which it is implied. This superstition, indeed, appears in the works of the oldest Bards, which are now extant, incorporated with their Arkite mythology: but those who were more peculiarly devoted to it, had the opprobrious name of Beirdd Beli—the Bards of Beli.

When we recollect the Gaulish tradition of Cæsar's days—That the discipline of Druidism, such as it then was, had been modelled in Britain and from thence brought over into Gaul,* we may deem the following incident worthy of note.

Tristrem ordered his new vassal, Beliagog, to build a hall—(temple)—in honour of Ysonde and Brengwain—the Ceres and Proserpine of Cornwall. The giant complied with this injunction, and built the hall within his own castle, to which he taught Tristrem a secure and secret approach. He also adorned this hall with sculptures, exactly representing the whole history of his former life, with exact representations of Ysonde, Brengwain, Mark, Meriadok, his minister, Hodain, and Peticrewe, their mystical dogs.

This, surely, as a mythological tablet, describes the introduction of a system of theology, and religious rites, out of Britain into Gaul; and this appears to have been a mixture of Arkite superstition, and Sabian idolatry.

In the chapter which I have just quoted from Cæsar, the historian adds the information, that in his days, those who wished to have a more accurate knowledge of Druidism, generally went into Britain for instruction.

This circumstance was not overlooked in the tale of Sir Tristrem. This knight gave his brother-in-law, Ganhardin, Prince of Brittany, such an interesting description of the Queen of Cornwall, that his curiosity was strongly excited. Being conducted by Tristrem to the marvellous castle of Beliagog, which he could scarcely approach without trembling, and having there viewed the portraits of Ysonde and Brengwain, he was so astonished with their beauty, that he staggered, and fell backward in a swoon. Upon his recovery, he felt a violent passion for the charms of Brengwain, Proserpine, whom he determined to see in person, without loss of time. Accordingly, the Gaulish prince embarks for this island, attended by the British hierophant. They arrive in Cornwall, meet Ysonde and Brengwain, in the forest, or grove, where the enamoured stranger is espoused to the latter.

* De Bell. Gall. L. VI. c. 13.

The Auchinleck MS. being imperfect, breaks off in this place. The conclusion of the tale is supplied by the learned editor from some French fragments. But, if I may judge from British mythology, which certainly constitutes the basis of the history of Sir Tristrem, this part is less authentic than the work of Thomas the Rhymor.

The particulars which I have remarked in this story, have the genuine character of that traditional lore, which we find in the Triads, the Mabinogion, and several passages of the ancient Bards: and they discover one principal source of those romantic narratives, which, for a series of ages, constituted the favourite reading of Europe.

Such tales as the Mabinogion, it will be said, do not deserve to be ranked with sober history. This is freely acknowledged. They are only brought forward, to diffuse a faint ray over ages, where history refuses its light. In this sense, they may be useful. They contain traditions of remote times, when Druidism had many private, and some avowed friends: and they are found to coincide with the most authentic documents which we have upon the subject of British superstition, and with the researches of our best antiquaries.

Thus, under the representation of three mighty swine-herds, or hierophants, we have, first of all, an account of the earliest religion of our Celtic ancestors, concerning which any memorials have come to our times: and this appears to have consisted of a depraved copy of the patriarchal religion, with a strong abhorrence of Sabian idolatry.

Coll and his mystical sow, present the picture of a novel system, which was introduced into Cornwall, and from thence extended into Wales, and into other parts of Britain. This had a general correspondence with the former, in the memorials of Arkite superstition; but it also included an adoration of the heavenly bodies, and viewed the deified patriarch, as united with the sun.

The character of Trystan continues the history of a heterogeneous superstition, made up of the religion of the native Britons, incorporated with foreign innovation, extending over great part of Britain, and cultivated in Ireland, but chiefly centering in Cornwall, where it had gained the first establishment upon British ground, and from thence introduced into Gaul.

As the characters of the three great swine-herds, present a general view of the history and revolutions of Druidism, previous to the Roman conquest of Briton; it may not be amiss to consider a few traditions, relating to those events which affected the superstition of our ancestors, subsequent to that period.

The British documents, in which these traditions are involved, are, it must be confessed, like the former, sufficiently uncouth and obscure; but they are the best that we have, and I shall pass over them as slightly as possible.

That the Romans, during their profession of paganism, shewed but little countenance to the Celtic priesthood, may be inferred from the severe prohibition of their religious rites in Gaul, and from the conduct of Suetonius, towards the Druids, the groves and the altars of Mona. And it cannot be supposed, that this people, after they became Christian, could view the remains of British idolatry, with more favourable eyes.

The public sacrifices of the Druids, and their open profession of magic, were undoubtedly suppressed in those parts of the provinces, which were more immediately under the inspection of the government. But this operation of civil edicts, does not necessarily imply, the immediate eradication of an inveterate superstition from the minds of the people. From what we know of British infatuation, after the departure of the Romans, it is reasonable to conclude, that during their vassalage, our progenitors had kept fast hold of their ancient prejudices and customs. We are told, which is probably true, that in many corners of the island, the Romans permitted the natives to be governed partly by their own laws, and under princes of their own. In those Asyla, people thus disposed, and who spoke a language which was unintelligible to their political masters, would naturally preserve the memory of their sacred poems and traditional institutes: they would also continue to perform such of their mystical rites, as were less obnoxious to observation and public censure.

From the language of the Triads, and some ancient poems, there is reason to infer, that they carried their prejudices still further: that during the Roman government, there was a seminary of Druids some where in the North of Britain, or in an adjacent island; and probably beyond the limits of the empire, where the doctrine and discipline of heathenism were cultivated without controul: that those Druids persisted in sacrificing, even human victims: that certain devotees, from the Southern provinces, repaired to their solemn festivals: that upon the departure of the Romans, some abominable rites were brought back from the North into Mona, and into other parts of Wales; and that the Northern seminary was not finally suppressed till the close of the sixth century.

The notices upon which I ground this opinion, I now proceed to state.

Of the introduction of the Cornish mode of Druidism into Carnarvonshire, and from thence into North Britain, we have had a hint in the story of Coll, the great mystagogue, who is said to have presented Brynach, prince of the Northern Gwyddelians, with the Eaglet which was deposited by the mystical sow, and which, in after times became very famous.

The fame of this eagle and his progeny, is now to be recognized only in the history of the two dusky birds of

Gwenddoleu, which guarded his treasure, wearing a yoke of gold; and which were in the daily habit of consuming two persons for their dinner, and the like number for their supper.* Such is the language of the Triads: and if this does not imply the sacrificing of human victims, to some divinity, who acknowledged those birds for his symbols, or his attributes, I know not what to make of it.

Gwenddoleu, the master of those consumers, is described as a prince, who resided on the North of the Strath-Clwyd Britons; but contiguous to them. His destructive birds fell together with himself, by the hand of Gall Power, the son of Dysg Yvedawg, the imbiber of learning, who is represented as prince of Deira and Bernicia. This catastrophe happened in the battle of Arderydd ag Eryddon, the high eagle, and the eagles, a fanatical contest on account of a bird's nest, † which was decided in the year 593. ‡

These birds which daily consumed their human victims—which were destroyed by the power of a prince, who had imbibed learning, or embraced Christianity, and in the battle of eagles, are certainly to be understood in a mystical sense; and as the eagle was one of the symbols under which an object of Druidical superstition was represented, I presume that these birds of Gwenddoleu must have the same symbolical meaning, as the eaglet which was

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 9, 13, 65.

† W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 11, 65.

‡ Cambrian Register, V. II. p. 313.

In this contest, another mystical canibal was destroyed—namely, Gwrgi Garw lwyd—the hideous, grey, human dog.

brought forth, by the mystical sow, or genius of the ark, and presented to a prince of the North Britons.

If this be admitted, it must at the same time be supposed, that Gwenddoleu himself was either a priest or a divinity in the superstitious establishment of those Britons.

Let us inquire a little into his character and connexions.

That there was a celebrated Northern prince in the sixth century, known by the name of Gwenddoleu, and literally opposed to Rhydderch, in the battle of Arderydd, I will not take upon me to deny; but as it was a notorious practice of British priests, to assume some title of the God they worshipped; and as this name implies of the luminous oblique courses, I rather think it was an epithet for the sun. His priest, notwithstanding, may have taken a fancy to it.

Gwenddoleu was the son of Ceidio, preservation, the son of Arthwys, the incloser, the Arkite, the son of Môr, the sea. Amongst his uncles and brothers we have Pabo, producer of life; Eleuver, the luminary; Cov; memory, and Nudd, mist.—Those are mystical connections of the Helio-Arkite divinity.

If we look for Nudd, we shall find that he draws his pedigree somewhat differently, but from the same vocabulary of superstition.—He was the son of Senyllt, the seneschal or mystagogue, the son of Cedig, the beneficent, a title of the Arkite goddess, recognized by Talcisin.* And this Nudd

* Appendix, No. 4.

had a son named Drywon, the Druidical teacher, whose retinue is celebrated for having voluntarily maintained the contest, in the open course of Arderydd, the scene of Gwenddoleu's overthrow.*

The fidelity of Gwenddoleu's retinue is equally famous. It is recorded of them, that they maintained the conflict for forty-six days after the death of their Lord, and till they had avenged his fall.†

Gwenddoleu was also one of the renowned bulls of the contest of mystery, classed with the Primordial great one, son of the prior world, of former inhabitants; and with the parent, son of the primitive horse, Hippos or sacred ship. He, therefore, personified the great Helio-Arkite god.

From these notices offered by the Triads, let us turn to Merddin, the Caledonian. This dignified priest informs us, that his Lord Gwenddoleu had presented, or privately exhibited to him, a hundred and forty-seven apple-trees of equal age, height, length, and size, which had sprung from the bosom of Mercy; were enveloped by one mystical veil, and were still left under the protection or Olwen, a mythological character, who must be identified with the Arkite goddess.—The fruit of these trees were precious things which Gwenddoleu freely bestowed.‡

H H

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 8. 12. 69.

† Ibid. p. 7. 16. 70. The poems of Merddin the Caledonian, afford ground of conjecture, that these days were years, during which, the votaries of Druidism persisted in their superstitious practices, after some severe laws had been promulgated against them, ‡ Merddin's Avallenau, 1, and 6.

Those trees, as I shall shew presently, were purely allegorical, and imported the various secrets of Druidism; consequently, Gwenddoleu, who had the peculiar privilege of exhibiting the mystical orchard, and disposing of its produce, must in some sense, have presided over the order of Druids. And thus much is implied, in the dialogue between Gwyn ab Nudd, the king of the deep, and Gwyddnaw, the great Heriophant, or representative of the patriarch, where Gwenddoleu is styled Colovyn Cerddeu—the pillar of Bardic lore.*

Putting these things together, and still recollecting the birds which wore a golden yoke, guarded the treasures of Gwenddoleu, and consumed four persons daily; I think we may conclude, that Gwenddoleu was the head of an eminent Druidical establishment in North Britain, which admitted of human sacrifices. And whether he is to be deemed a divinity, or an Arch-Druid, the representative of a divinity, his influence at one period must have been very extensive, as we may collect from the language of his votary and chosen priest, Merddin the Caledonian.

“ I have seen Gwenddoleu, adorned with the precious “ gifts of princes, gathering his contributions from every “ extremity of the land: now, alas the red turf has covered
 “ the most gentle chief of the Northern sovereigns.” †

As this mystical ruler of sovereigns, who had received his offerings from the remotest regions, was Merddin's acknowledged lord, it may not be amiss to consider a few particulars of that Bard's character, both as drawn by certain ancient writers, who composed in his name, and as exhibited by himself in his genuine works.

* W. Archaiol. p. 166.

† Hoianau 3.

To the English reader, I am aware, that the term Bard, suggests only the idea of a person of mean condition, who has distinguished himself by the composition of a few silly rhymes; and this idea is generally accurate, when it regards the modern Welsh Bards: but amongst the ancient Britons, the title was of eminent dignity and importance; it could be conferred only upon men of distinguished rank in society, and who filled a sacred office.

Thus, Merddin is styled supreme judge of the North; that is, of the regions beyond the little kingdom of Strath Clwyd; and the Syw, or diviner of every region:* and in virtue of this office, he was Cerddglud Clyd Lliant, president of Bardic lore, about the waters of Clyde.† He was companion of Canawon Cynllaith,‡ the offspring of the goddess of slaughter, whom Aneurin thus commemorates, in the songs of the Gododin.—“ If, in the banquet of “ mead and wine, the Saxons sacrificed to slaughter, the “ mother of spoliation; the energetic Eidiol also honoured
“ her before the mount, in the presence of the god of “ victory, the king who rises in light, and ascends the “ sky.”§

H H 2

* Cyvoesi 1.

† Ibid. 11.

‡ Ibid. 11. 47.

§ Song 22.

And this connexion between the British divinities of slaughter and victory, is marked in the character of Merddin, who is styled—*Allwedd byddin Búdd Nér—the key, or, interpreter of the army of the god of victory.

He was the brother of Gwenddydd Wen, adlam Cerddeu†—the fair lady of the day, the refuge of Bardic lore—a mythological character: and this lady addresses the venerable priest in the following terms:—“ Arise from thy secret place, and unfold the books of the Awen (Bardic muse, a name of Ceres), the object of general dread, and the speech of Bun, Proserpine, and the visions of sleep.”‡

These are some of the qualifications of Merddin, as recorded by a Northern, but unknown Bard, who wrote in his name and character about the year 948.§ He was a supreme judge, a priest, and a prophet—and he was conversant in the mysteries of the very same divinities, Cynllaith, Búdd, Awen, and Bún, which were revered at the great temple of Stonehenge.

His reputation as a prophet, has thrown a shade over the few remains of his genuine productions. It has suggested a hint for their interpolation, by more recent Bards, with political predictions, adapted to the circumstances of the times, or the views of parties. The mystical poem, called

* Cyvoesi 69.

† Ibid. 133.

‡ Ibid. 129.

§ So his age is fixed by our great antiquary, Ed. Llwyd. See his Catalogue of British MSS.

Hoianau, certainly contains some specimens of this kind, which cannot be as old as the time of Merddin: yet, I think, the bulk of the piece is his genuine composition. At least, it is not the work of a Welshman; for much of its grammatical idiom, and several of its terms, are in the language of those Northern people, amongst whom, it is acknowledged that Merddin lived.*

In this piece, Merddin the Caledonian, like Pryderi, Coll, and Trystan, supports the character of a swineherd, or mystagogue. He had resided, with his herd, either in an island, or in some remote promontory, where, amongst other arts, he had practiced divination, by the flight and voices of sea-fowls. And it is from this locality of his residence, as I suppose, that he is called the son of Morvryn, the mount in the sea.

In this happy retreat, Merddin is exposed, as well as his mystical herd, to a severe persecution, conducted by a King

* This fact will appear upon the examination of the very first line.

Oian a phorchellan, a pharchell dedwydd—which would be thus expressed in Welsh—

Edrych o barchellyn, o barchell dedwydd.

“Attend, thou little pig, thou initiated pig.”

It must here be remarked, that we have no such word as Oian: it certainly comes from the Irish and Caledonian verb Oighan, or Oighanam, I behold, I attend, whence the imperative Oighan, pronounced Oi'an, Behold! Attend!

Again, a, in Irish and Erse, is a sign of the vocative case; but it is never so in Welsh: we write and pronounce o.

The initial p in porchellan, is here changed into ph, after the sign of the vocative, as in Ireland and the Highlands; whereas in Welsh, it would necessarily become a b. Thus, instead of the exclamation of the Irish Ossian—A Phadruig, O Patrick, a Welshman would express himself—“O Badrig!” and in all parallel cases, the variations of the initials are the same.

Porchell, in this poem, takes the Irish and Erse diminutive termination, an, which the Welsh express by yn. So that it is evident from these three first words, that the Hoianau is not Welsh; and that we had our copy from the country of Merddin: for had it come from Ireland, it would have differed still more than it does from our native idiom.

of Alclud, who is styled Rhydderch Hael, Rhwyviadur ffydd—Rhydderch the Liberal, the champion of the Christian faith.

The flame kindled by this King of the Strath Clwyd Britons, communicates itself to the neighbouring princes, to a host of bishops and monks, and, in short, to all the professors of Christianity; and the grunting chorus is in danger of being roasted alive.

It is upon this occasion, that the terrified Druid rouses the attention of his pigs, and warns them to fly for their lives into some secret place in the Caledonian forest. His address is worthy of a swineherd, and of his audience. The reader may be amused with a short specimen or two.

“ Attend, little pig—thou initiated pig! Burrow not with thy snout on the top of the hill. Burrow in a secret hiding place, amongst the forests—a place which has not been noted by Rhydderch the Liberal, the champion of the faith.”

“ Attend, little pig! it was necessary to depart—to avoid the hunters of the water-dwellings (our insular abodes), if they should attempt to seize us—lest the persecution should come upon us, and we should be seen. If we can but escape, we will not deplore our calamitous toil.”*

If all this is to be understood in the literal sense, what ideas must we entertain of the Christian princes and bishops, who could condescend to persecute such a groveling herd!

* Hoianau 1, 2.

But the initiated or enlightened swine were certainly allegorical: and the real objects of persecution are suggested in a little poem,* purporting to have been a dialogue between Merddin, and a person called Ys Colan, The Colan. Here our swineherd appears in the character of an insolent and contumacious pagan.

Merddin seeing a stranger approach his watery nook, with a black horse, and a black cap, and in dark attire, demands if his name was Ys Colan.

The stranger replies, that he really was Ys Colan, a Scottish or Irish scholar, who held the Bard in little esteem: and at the same time denounces the vengeance of the king upon those who should refuse to plunge into the water, or be baptized.

As the battle of Ardeydd, or the æra of the persecution of the Bards, is dated in the year 593,† and as Merddin and his associates made a precarious stand for some years longer, I think it highly probable that The Colan, an Irish scholar, who introduced Christianity amongst the Druidical herd in Caledonia, and enforced the necessity of baptism, was no other than Colomba, the priest and abbot, who came out of Ireland into Britain, in the year 605, to instruct the Northern Picts in the Christian religion, and received from his converts, the island of Hu, Iona, or I-Colm-Kil.‡

To this mission of the good abbot, Merddin seems to have made an obstinate resistance: for in the poem above mentioned, he complains of the penalties he had incurred, by having burnt the church, obstructed the establishment of a school, and drowned a book, with which he had been presented.

* W Archaiol. p. 132.

† Cam. Reg. V. II, p. 313.

‡ Bede, L. III. c. 4. Gibson's Camden Col. 1244. 1462.

He then pleads the merit of having been confined for a whole year upon the pole of a wear: that is, having been initiated, like Taliesin, into the greater mysteries of the wear of Gwyddnaw; and upon this plea, he implores the Creator to forgive his offences.*

In the conclusion he acknowledges, that had he known how perceptibly the wind blew upon the points of the mystical sprigs, he would have desisted from an action which he had imprudently committed. As this is an illusion to the Bardic mode of writing, it may imply, that Merddin had either disclosed or written something in defence of his system, which, in the event, proved injurious to it. And the Bards have a tradition, that Ys Colan threw a heap of British books into the fire.

From these particulars, it is pretty evident that Merddin, the vassal of Gwenddoleu, has been viewed as the hierophant of a herd of heathenish swine.

Let us now consider the character of their great enemy, who instigated the neighbouring princes, together with the bishops and monks, to unite in the persecution of this infatuated race.

* I follow the order of a MS. copy in my possession, The printed edition has transposed two stanzas.

Rhydderch the Liberal, the son of Tudwal of Tud-Clyd, or the district of Clyde, was King of the Strath Clwyd Britons, about the close of the sixth century; and his residence was at Alclud, or Dunbarton.* We have seen, that he is mentioned by Merddin as the champion of the Christian faith, and the determined persecutor of the mystagogue and his swine.

In the Cyvoesi, where Merddin is introduced as prophesying of those events which should take place, subsequent to the battle of Arderydd, in which Rhydderch slew the celebrated Gwenddoleu, we are further told—

Dyd Gwynnydd yn rhyd—Tawy,
Rhydderch Hael, dan ysbeid,
Gelyn Dinas Beirdd bro Glyd.

This passage is somewhat obscure, owing to the transposition of the sentences: but the meaning is this—

“ Rhydderch the Liberal, the enemy of the community of Bards, in the vale of Clyde, after an interval, will put the white-vested ones into the ford of Tay.”†

That is, when Rhydderch had routed the idolatrous Bards from his own dominions, and the neighbouring districts, they retired into the midst of the Caledonian forest, as related by Merddin. After some time, their retreat is discovered upon the bank of the Tay; and the pagan fugi-

* W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 11.

† Tawy, a principal river, that penetrates the centre of the Caledonian forest, must be the Tay, tives are still pursued, by the influence of Khydderch. But as this "Liberal" prince puts the white-vested ones, or Druids, into the ford, and not into the deep parts of the river, we may conclude that his intention was to baptize, and not to drown them.

Hence we may form a probable idea of what is meant, by the celebrated battle of Ard-erydd ag Eryddon, the high eagle and the eagles, in which this Christian prince slew Gwenddoleu, who was at the head of the Druidical superstition—in which the imbiber of learning slew his two mystical birds, which delighted in human sacrifices—in which that cannibal monster, Gwrgi Garwlwyd, the hideous and grey human dog, also fell; and in which the united champions of the Christian faith dispersed the adherents to the ancient superstition, amongst the rocks and caves of the Caledonian forest.

This battle seems to have been decided, not by the sword, but by severe edicts, by the oratory of Christian ministers, and the zeal of reformers, manifested in the demolition of idols and heathen temples, and in the punishment of the contumacious, or their expulsion from society.

I have now produced a chain of traditional notices, which imply, that the symbols of superstition found their way into the North, from Cornwall, and through Wales, in an age of general heathenism; and that the superstition which accompanied these symbols, flourished in the West of Scotland, till nearly the close of the sixth century.

It is farther intimated in a whimsical Triad, that the provincial Britons viewed this Northern hierarchy with great respect, and that they not only made pilgrimages to the feasts of the Caledonian priests, but also, that they re-imported some of their mystical furniture and rites into Wales, after the departure of the Romans. This Triad introduces certain sacred ships, under the character of horses, like the Hippi of Greek mythology. The first article runs thus—

“ Three horses carried the three loads of the island of Britain. The black horse of the seas, the steed of Heliodorus, the most courteous, carried seven persons and a half, from the mount of the flat stone of Heliodorus, in the North, to the mount of the flat stone of Heliodorus, in Mona.

“ The seven persons were, Heliodorus, the most courteous; Eurgain, golden splendour, his wife, the daughter of Maelgwn, the beneficent chief; and Gwyn da Gyvoed—white,* good to his contemporaries, the master of his dogs (his high priest); and Gwyn da Reiniad, white, the good darter; and the monk of Nawmon, the ship of the cow, his counsellor; and Pedrylaw, four-handed, his butler; and Arianvagyl, silvercrook, his servant. And the half person was Gel ben evyn, shoot or branch, with the shackled

* These whites were Druids.

“ head, his cook, who swam with his hands upon the horse’s
“ crupper, and his feet in the water.”*

It is hoped the general reader will excuse the introduction of this odd paragraph, for the sake of the mythologist or antiquary, who may discover something curious in the several items. I shall only remark, that the steed which carried such a load of mysterious beings out of Scotland into Mona, and by sea, can only be considered as the representative of the sacred ship of mythology, which was the vehicle of the mystical eight.

This voyage took place in the interval, between the departure of the Romans in the fifth, and the general conversion of the Welsh about the close of the sixth, century: the story, therefore, involves an account of the re-conducting of some Druidical apparatus, with a suite of priests, out of Scotland into Wales. And the name of Heliodorus, the master of the group, has, probably, a reference to the sun, who was a distinguished object in the mysticism of Coll, the Cornish hierophant.

The Triad proceeds thus—

“ The second load was that of Cornan, having small “ horns—crescent—the horse of the sons Eliver, with the “ great retinue, which carried Gwergi and Peredur, and “ Dunawd Bwr, the sons of Pabo, and Cynvelyn Drwscyl,
“ to see the sacred fire of Gwenddoleu, in Arderydd.”

Here we have pilgrimages to the solemnities of the Northern Druids. This Cornan, or Crescent, was, I suppose, a mere symbol of the sacred ship; an insigne of the same import as the Cwrwg Gwydrin, or boat of glass, mentioned by Taliesin, as exhibited in the hand of the stranger, and procuring his admission to the nocturnal celebrities.*

* W. Archaiol, V. II. p. 7, 20, 79.

The heroes, whom this Cornan introduced to the Northern solemnities, were near relations of Gwenddoleu, or members of his mystical society. Eliver and Pabo were brothers of Ceidio, Gwenddoleu's father, and grandsons of Môr, the sea.†

Gwrgi and Peredur, the sons of Pabo, were, at last, deserted by their party, and slain at Caer Greu, the city of blood,‡ or in the battle of Ardeydd.§ Their story is full of mythology. Gwrgi, the human dog, surnamed Garw-lywyd, hideous and grey, like the birds of his cousin Gwenddoleu, delighted in human sacrifices; and, like them, was slain by a son of the imbiber of learning.||

The third mystical load recorded by our Triad, was that

* Cadair Taliesin, in the third section of this Essay. See also Maurice's Ludian Antiquities, V. VI. p. 190. Bryant's Analysis, V. II. p. 242.

† In Montfaucon's Antiquities, V. II. fronting p. 276, is the figure of a bass relief, found at Autun, representing the Arch-Druid bearing his sceptre, and crowned with a garland of oak leaves, whilst another Druid approaches, and displays a crescent in his right hand.

‡ Eliver is sometimes called Eleuver, the luminary (W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 64). Gugawn Gwron, the severely energetic, herald of mysteries, is sometimes represented as his son, and other times as his grandson. Ibid. p. 15 and 63.

§ Ibid. p. 8, 16, 70.

|| Camb. Reg. V. II. p. 313.

|| W. Archaiol. V, II. p. 9, 13, 65.

of Erch, or Haid,* the steed of Gwrthmwl, the sovereign, which carried Gwair, and Clais, and Arthanawd, upon an expedition against the cliff of Maelawr, in Cardigan, to avenge their father. It was a sacred law with Maelawr, not to close his port against any load that might arrive: in consequence of this, he was slain.†

This sea-horse, or ship, called a bee in one dialect, and a swarm in another, must be referred to Melissa, and her Melissæ, or the Arkite goddess and her priesthood.

Gwrthmwl, the sovereign, was the priest of an idol, or sacred ox, called Tarw Ellyll, the bull demon:‡ but this bull pertained to the Arkite deity.

His residence was at the promontory, or insular mount of Rheonydd, in the North, where he presided as chief elder, or high priest, of one of the regal tribes, under the mythological Arthur.§ His castle was one of the principal palaces, or temples, of that patriarch;|| and, in a comparatively recent age of Christianity, it became the scite of an archiepiscopal church.¶

Rheonydd is, evidently, the same as Merddin's Caer Rhëon and Rhyd Rhëon, once the chief seat of his su-

* Irish, Earc, à bee: Welsh, Haid, a swarm.

† W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 7, 20, 79.

‡ Ibid. p. 16, 17, 71.

§ Ibid. p. 3, 68.

|| Ibid. p. 14, 73.

¶ Ibid. p. 68.

perstition, whence he was routed by Ys Colan, or St. Columba.

Hence it may fairly be conjectured, that this celebrated spot, the great asylum of the Northern Druids, was the island of Hu, or Iona, which was occupied by the said Columba, and in after-ages contained the metropolitan church of all the Western islands. The early Christians did often erect their churches upon the ruins of heathen temples.

Mr. Bryant is positively of opinion, from the very names of Columbkil and Iöna, that this island was, anciently, sacred to the Arkite divinities. If I may be permitted to go upon similar grounds, I may remind the reader, that the Britons did worship the patriarch by the name of Hu; and that Taliesin expressly denominates Mona, the great sanctuary of Arkite superstition, Ynys gwawd Hu, the island of the praise of Hu; and hence I may infer, that Bede's island of Hu, at one period, constituted the centre of Northern Druidism.

From this place, the sons of Gwrthmwl, the sovereign, the master of the bull demon, proceed with their horse, or sacred ship, and land in South Wales, for the purpose of avenging their father, or reinstating him in those honours, which he had partly lost during the Roman government.

Amongst the heroes engaged in this expedition, I distinguish the name of Gwair, one of the titles of the Diluvian patriarch. This personage, and his associates, overcome their adversary, or the humbled and more timid superstition, which had hitherto lingered in the Southern provinces; and they succeeded in replanting some mystical rites in the territories of the Welsh, during the short period of British independence.

Thus, the history of the three mythological horses is referred to the tampering of our Cambrian progenitors with some heathenish superstitions, which had been cherished in the North, beyond the line of the Roman empire: and if I may depend upon our Welsh chronologers, for the æra of the characters here introduced, these transactions occurred after the departure of the Romans, and a considerable time before Rhydderch, with his princes, bishops, and monks, slew Gwenddoleu and his cannibal birds, or ruined the Northern establishment of the Druids.

Of the consequence of the battle of Arderydd, we have some account in the Avallenau, or apple-trees, a poem, which Mr. Turner has proved to be the genuine production of Merddin; and which contains the expiring groans of the Northern Druids.

However grievous Merddin's afflictions may have been, for the fall of his lord, Gwenddoleu, we find, that his own hand added greatly to their weight, by the undesigned slaughter of his own sister's* son, in the same fatal engagement.

* That is, the son of Gwenddydd, the lady of the day.

It is difficult to ascertain the precise meaning of this poetical incident: but we may suppose in general, that the mystagogue, in the imprudent defence of his fraternity, committed some action which proved detrimental to its cause. We are told, however, that the effect of his error was a derangement of intellect, an abhorrence of society, and a precipitate flight into the forest of Caledonia.

In this frantic mood, and after an interval of many years, he makes the rocks and caves resound, with the melody of his strain; in which his derangement appears to have been only assumed, for the purpose of repressing curiosity: for though his descriptions are designedly obscure, they have too much method for real madness. It is the madness of a heathen prophet.

The ostensible purport of this poem is a tribute of gratitude for an orchard, containing a hundred and forty-seven delicious apple trees, which had been privately exhibited to the Bard, by his Lord Gwendolen, and which he still carries with him in all his wanderings.

This circumstance, at once, points out the impropriety of understanding Merddin's orchard, in the literal sense, and leads us to some allegorical meaning.

Many particulars of this allegory may be interpreted from what has gone before in this essay; and it may be admitted as additional evidence, of two curious facts: namely, that the superstitious rites of Druidism were avowedly practiced, in certain corners of Britain, as late as the close of the sixth century; and that the Bards of that age, used all the means in their power, to conceal their secrets from the knowledge of the populace, to guard them from the persecution of Christian princes and ministers, and at the same time, to transmit them safe and unblemished, to future ages.

In support of this assertion, I shall produce abstracts from the several stanzas of the Avallenau, translated as literally as the darkness of the subject, and the faults of the copies, will permit: and to these, I shall add a few occasional remarks.

“ To no one has been exhibited, at one hour of dawn, what was shewn to Merddin, before he became aged; namely, seven score and seven delicious apple trees, of equal age, height, length, and size, which sprung from the bosom of Mercy. One bending veil covers them over. They are guarded by one maid, with crisped locks: her name is Olwedd, with the luminous teeth.”*

These trees are 147, which was a sacred number amongst the Britons, as we learn from Taliesin. †

They were exhibited at the dawn, the hour when the nocturnal celebration of mysteries was completed. The view of these trees, therefore, implies the complete initiation of the priest.

They were in every respect, perfect tallies with each other, and asserted to have been of divine origin. Hence we may

* W. Archaiol. p. 150.

† Angar Cymyrdawd. Ibid. p. 34.

This is the square of 7, multiplied by the mystical 3. The round number 140 often occurs. This is the computed number of the stones, which completed the great temple upon Salisbury plain.

gather, that one of the secrets communicated by these trees, was the Druidical art of divining by lots: and that Merdin's Avallen Beren, in this sense, corresponded with the Arbor Frugifera of Tacitus,* the shoots of which were cut into lots or tallies, distinguished by energetic marks, thrown into a white garment, or covered with a veil, and thus became the means of interpreting the will of heaven.

These trees still remained under their veil, and in the custody of the divine maid, Olwedd or Olwen—the British Proserpine.

But to proceed—

“ The delicious apple tree, with blossoms of pure white,
 “ and wide spreading branches, produces sweet apples, for “ those who can digest them. And they have always grown
 “ in the wood, which grows apart. The nymph who appears
 “ and disappears, vaticinates—words which will come to “ pass, &c.

The Bard, having described his trees in the first Stanza, as exactly similar to each other, contents himself in the sequel, with mentioning one of them. The white blossoms seem to imply the robe of the Druid, the spreading branches, his extensive authority, the fruit, his doctrine and hopes,

* This identity will appear more clearly in the sequel. If it be said, that Tacitus describes a German, and not a Celtic rite, I would reply, that the Barditus or Bardism, which the Germans near the Rhine, possessed, in the days of that historian, was probably a shread of the Celtic institute, which had been expelled from Gaul. I do not find that any such term as Barditus was familiar to the Germans of Cæsar, or to those of the Edda.

and the seques'ered wood which had always produced this fruit, his sacred grove.

Most of the Stanzas conclude with a vaticination of some great event, which is here put into the mouth of Chwibleian, the nymph, or goddess, who is alternately visible and invisible, still meaning Olwen or Proserpine, who guarded the sacred trees, or presided over the mysteries.

In the third Stanza, Merddin tells us, that he had armed himself with sword and shield, and lodged in the Caledonian wood, guarding the trunk of the tree, in order to gratify Bún, the maid, Proserpine, who, by way of acknowledgement, calls to him in the Northern dialect—Oian a Phorchellan, attend little pig, and bids him listen to the songs of the birds. The Bard complies, and learns the secrets of futurity.

Stanza 4. “ The sweet apple tree has pure white sprigs,
 “ which grow, as a portion for food. I had rather en“ counter the wrath of a sovereign, than permit rustics
 “ in raven hue, to ascend its branches. The lady of com“ manding aspect is splendidly endowed; nor am I destitute
 “ either of talents or of emulation.”

The white sprigs could only have furnished mental food for the Bards, as constituting their lots and their books. The men in black seem to have been the monks, who strove to expose the secrets of Druidism, whilst Merddin, the fanatical devotee of the mystical goddess, was determined to guard them, at the hazard of his life.

Stanza 5. “ The fair apple tree grows upon the border of

“ the vale: its yellow apples and its leaves, are desirable objects, and even I have been beloved by my Gwnem, and my wolf; but now my complexion is faded by long weeping; I am neglected by my former friends, and wander amongst spectres who know me not.”

Thus pathetically does our mystagogue deplore his forlorn condition, after the ruin of his establishment. Gwnem seems to be a corruption of Gwenyn, bees, priestesses, which were deposited by the mystical sow; and especially as they are joined with the wolf, another of her productions.

“ Thou sweet and beneficent tree! not scanty is the fruit with which thou art loaded; but upon thy account, I am terrified and anxious, lest the wood-men should come, those profaners of the wood, to dig up thy root, and corrupt thy seed, that not an apple may ever grow upon thee more.”

“ I am become a wild distracted object, no longer greeted by the brethren of my order, nor covered with my habit. Upon me Gwenddoleu freely bestowed these precious gifts; but he is, this day, as if he had never been.”—
(Stanza 6.)

“ The proper place of this delicate tree, is within a shelter of great renown, highly beneficent and beautiful; but princes devise false pretences, with lying, gluttonous, and vicious monks, and pert youngsters, rash in their designs—these are the aspiring men who will triumph in the course.”—(Stanza 7.)

“ Now, alas, the tree which avoids rumour, grows upon

“ the confluence of streams, without the raised circle.”*—
(Stanza 8.)

In these passages, we perceive the Bard's great anxiety to preserve his mystical lore, from the effects of persecution, by princes, monks, and their youthful agents, who are employed in polluting and cutting down the sacred groves, and demolishing the circular temples.

“ This sweet apple tree abounds with small shoots; but
“ the multitude cannot taste its yellow fruit.”

“ I have been associated with select men, to cultivate and “ cherish its trunk—and when Dyvnant shall be named
“ the city of the stones, the Bard shall receive his per-“ quisite.”—

“ Incorruptible is the tree which grows in the spot, set “ apart (the sanctuary) under its wide envelope. For four “ hundred years may it remain in peace! But its root is “ oftener surrounded by the violating wolf, than by the “ youth who can enjoy its fruit.”—

“ This tree they would fain expose to public view; so
“ the drops of water would fain wet the duck's feather.”—
(Stanza 9, 10, 11.)

Here the fanatical priest cherishes a hope, that his Druidism, and his temples, will be re-established in some future age, though he has at present, more persecutors than disciples. In mentioning the 400 years, he seems to have a retrospect to the period of the Roman government, during which, his superstition had already weathered the storm of persecution, and therefore, as the Bard infers, it may survive another calamity of four centuries.

* In another copy—“ On the brow of a rock, without a stone in its circle.

Stanza 13. “ The fair tree grows in the glade of the “ wood.—Its hiding place has no skilful protector from the “ chiefs of Rhydderch, who trample on its roots, whilst the “ multitude compass it round. The energetic figures are “ viewed with grief and envy. The Lady of the Day loves “ me not, nor will she greet me. I am hated by the mi- “ nister of Rhydderch’s authority—his son and his daughter
 “ have I ruined. Death who removes all, why will he not “ visit me! After the loss of Gwenddolen,* the lady of the “ white bow, by no nymph am I respected. No soother “ amuses my grief: by no mistress am I visited. Yet, in “ the conflict of Arderydd, I wore the gold collar. Oh
 “ that I were precious, this day, with those who have the “ hue of the swan, (the white robed Druids!)”

Stanza 14. “ The tree with delicate blossoms, grows
 “ in concealment amongst the forests. A report is heard
 “ at the dawn, that the minister has expressed his indig-
 “ nation against the authority of the small sprigs †, twice,
 “ thrice, nay four times, in one day.”—

Stanza 15. “ The fair tree grows on the bank of a river.

* Gwenddolen, was the mystical daughter of an ancient king of Cornwall. She may represent in general, the Cornish rites; but I think, more particularly, the Lunar divinity. Thus she answers to Gwenddoleu, who represented the sun.

† This surely alludes to the practice of divining by lots.

“ A provost cannot thrive on the splendid fruit which I “ enjoyed from its trunk, whilst my reason was entire, in “ company with Bân, the maid, elegantly pleasing, deli“ cate and most beautiful. But now, for fifty years, have “ my splendid treasures been outlawed, whilst I have been “ wandering amongst ghosts and spectres, after having “ enjoyed abundant affluence, and the pleasant society of “ the tuneful tribe.”

Stanza 16. “ The sweet apple tree, with delicate blos“ soms, grows upon the sod, amongst the trees: and the “ half appearing maid predicts—words which will come to “ pass!—Mental design shall cover, as with a vessel, the “ green assemblies, from the princes, in the beginning of the “ tempestuous hour.—The Darter of Rays shall vanquish the “ profane man. Before the CHILD OF THE SUN, bold in his “ courses, Saxons shall be eradicated; Bards shall flourish.”

This prophecy, which is put into the mouth of Proserpine, unequivocally charges the Bards of Merddin's order, with the abomination of solar worship. The child of the Sun must have been his priest, who, like Taliesin, assumed his title and character.—

“ The blooming tree grows in Hidlock, in the Caledonian “ wood. The attempts to discover it, by its seeds, will be
 “ all in vain, till Cadwaladyr, the supreme ruler of battle, “ comes to the conference of Cadvaon, with the eagle of
 “ the Towy, and the Teivi—till ranks be formed of the “ white ones of the lofty mount, and the wearers of long “ hair be divided into the gentle and the fierce.”

“ The sweet fruits of this tree are prisoners of words.—
 “ The ASS will arise, to remove men out of office; but this

“ I know, an eagle from the sky will play with his men,
 “ and bitter will be the sound of Ywein’s arms.—A veil
 “ covers the tree with green branches—and I will foretel
 “ the harvest when the green corn shall be cropped—when “ the he eagle and the she eagle shall arrive from France.”*
 —(Stanza 17, 18, 19).

“ The sweet apple tree is like the Bardic mount of as-“ ssembly: the dogs of the wood will protect the circle of its “ roots.”—

“ Sweet are its branches, budding luxuriant, shooting
 “ forth renowned scions.”—(Stanza 20, 21.)

Concluding Stanza. “ The sweet apple tree, producing “ the most delicious fruit, grows in concealment in the “ Caledonian wood. In vain will it be sought upon the “ bank of its stream, till Cadwaladyr comes to the con“ ference of Rhyd Rheon, with Kynan, opposing the tu“ mult of the Saxons. Then Cymru shall prevail. Her “ chief shall be splendid. All shall have their just reward.
 “ Britons shall rejoice. The horns of joy shall sound—the “ song of peace and serenity.”†

Such are the seemingly wild hints, which Merddin has thought proper to communicate upon the subject of his

* Merddin is foreboding the restoration of his Lord Gwenddoleu’s canibal eagles.

† This triumphant close very much resembles that of Cadair Taliesin, Cadair Ceridwen, and several other mystical poems. This seems to have been the style of the Bards, at the completion of their diluvian mysteries, in commemoration of the returning season of serenity.

apple trees, and which, undoubtedly, were agreeable to the mystical lore of his order.

These trees, we find, were allegorical, and pointed to that mass of superstition, which the Bards of the sixth century had retained, and which they were desirous of concealing, preserving, and transmitting safely to posterity. The Christian princes and ministers, who diligently sought for the mystical orchard, for the avowed purpose of destroying it, root and branch, could have viewed it in no other light.

But though, under this type, the general system of Druidism may be represented; yet I am induced to conclude, from many circumstances which I need not recapitulate, that these trees, more particularly refer to the practice of sortilege, and have a marked connexion with the Coelbreni, Omen sticks, lots or letters of the Bards.*

As Merddin was the most recent character, deemed by his fraternity, to have possessed the gift of prophecy, his oracles were never superseded, during the long ages of superstition: but when new predictions were demanded for political purposes, the succeeding Bards thought it most expedient, either to interpolate the Hoianau, † or to make the prophet speak out of his grave. ‡

* That Merddin used them as means of divination, may be further inferred from hence; in most of the stanzas, a prediction of some great event is immediately subjoined to the contemplation of these mystical trees.

These predictions, of which I have inserted a specimen or two, are sometimes delivered by the Bard himself; at other times, they are put into the mouth of the guardian goddess, who has the property of alternately appearing and disappearing.

† W. Archaiol. p. 135.

‡ Ibid. p. 132.

The vaticinations of our ancient priest, are not much calculated to derive credit to his order, from the present age; but the absurdity of his pretensions was not peculiar to the Celtæ. Odin, as well as Merddin, was deemed a prophet, and Partridge and Moore were renowned Gothic Seers, of more recent days. Both in their nature, and in the fate which attended them, the predictions of our Caledonian Druid, seem to have resembled the celebrated lots, or oracles of Musæus, which are mentioned, and obliquely quoted by Herodotus. These were in such high credit amongst Greeks and Barbarians, that men of rank and talents thought them worth interpolating, for political purposes. But the Athenians deemed the crime worthy of banishment; and with good reason: the sacred predictions had an authority which could embolden foreign princes to invade their country.*

When we have once closed the poems of Merddin the Caledonian, we hear no more of the Druidism of the North. Of the countenance which this ancient superstition experienced amongst the Welsh, for some centuries longer; and of the documents which their poetry and traditions furnish upon the subject, I have endeavoured to give a fair and impartial account, in the present essay, which it is now time to bring to a conclusion. It is hoped, that the general view here presented, will not be deemed superfluous in a

* See Herodot. L, VII. C. 6.

British library, and that the cause of true religion cannot be injured by this delineation of the gloomy mazes of error.

I shall take a brief retrospect of what I have written, and add a few general reflections.

I have shewn, that the Bards pretend to the preservation of the mystical lore of the Druids; and that a comparison of their works, with the documents of classical antiquity, confirms the authenticity of their pretentions.

From the barren, or desolated field of Bardic philosophy, I hastened to the consideration of religious doctrines and rites; and here I have shewn, that the superstition of the ancient Britons consisted of two principal branches, intimately blended together.

One of these was Mr. Bryant's Arkite Theology, which embraced some memorials of the history of the deluge, together with an idolatrous commemoration of Noah, of his family, and of his sacred ship.

The other was Sabian idolatry, or the worship of the host of heaven, a superstition, which in many other countries, has existed in conjunction with Arkite theology.

It has been remarked, that the Britons constantly interweave the memorials of the deluge, with their remotest traditions of the origin of the country and the nation:

whence arose an inference, that this was the superstition of the earliest settlers in Britain, and the degenerate offspring of the patriarchal religion, which our ancestors derived from the great stock of the Noachidæ.

On the contrary, it was shewn, that British tradition clearly discriminates, and steadily reports the worship of the sun and moon, as an innovation, which found its way into Cornwall, and from thence diffused itself into various parts of the British islands; and hence, I judged it a reasonable conjecture, that this alloy was derived from the tin merchants of Phœnicia, in whose country, a similar superstition confessedly prevailed.

From this analysis it appears, that the religion of the Britons differed from that of most heathen nations, only as a variety in the same species: that it presented no fundamental principle which can be accounted peculiar. Its two main branches, the Arkite and the Sabian, have been clearly traced, and in the same connexion, over great part of the ancient world.

This intimate, and almost universal combination of two systems, which have no obvious relation to each other, I cannot contemplate, without searching for some early cause of such connexion. Why should Noah be the sun? or why should the Arkite goddess be the moon? This is not the place for a new disquisition; but I may be allowed briefly to state a conjecture.

The righteous Noah and his family, who had been distinguished by a Supreme Providence, and miraculously preserved amidst a perishing world, must have been highly and justly revered, by their pious and obedient children, whilst living, their prayers were besought, and their precepts received, as the oracles of heaven.

After their death, their memory was revered, and a growing superstition may have begun to invoke these undoubted favourites of heaven, as mediators with the supreme being (just so the saints of the Roman church are invoked), and at last proceeded to worship them as gods.

The ark, also, was the means of preservation to the righteous. Its figure may have been consecrated, as a religious memorial of that preservation, till superstition began to view it as a pledge of safety, and to put it under the charge of an ideal being, who was worshipped as the universal mother.

Thus, the Arkite theology may have sprung from a corruption of the patriarchal religion; and in a manner which would not set the vain imaginations of man in immediate and open hostility with his fallible reason.

As to the incorporation of Sabian idolatry with this superstition, when I recollect, that amongst the heathen Britons, the sacred ship, or ark, the zodiac and the circular temple, had equally the name of Caer Sidi, I cannot help surmising, that the confusion arose from an abuse of the earliest post-diluvian astronomy.

Whether that science revived in Ararat or Chaldea, it was its evident design, to commemorate the history and circumstances of the deluge, in the disposition of signs and constellations. This device may have sprung from an innocent, or even laudable motive.

But from henceforth, the heavens represented those very scènes, with which Noah and his sons had been conversant. These canonized patriarchs were acknowledged to be immortal: for the age which first paid religious homage to the deceased, must of course have admitted the immortality of the soul, and the doctrine of future rewards.

The unbridled imagination of man no sooner contemplated the sun, moon, and planets, expatiating amongst the heavenly mansions of these immortals, than it also began to regard them as emblems of their persons, and of their sacred vessel; and therefore as mediators between the human race, and the unknown and great Supreme. Thus, the Arkite and the Sabian idolatry became one and the same.

This union seems not to have been coeval with the earliest Arkite superstition of the Noachidæ. Hence the traditions of the Greeks and other nations relative to the persecution of Latona and her children, of Hercules, Bacchus, and other characters which implied an adoration of the host of heaven. They were admitted, with reluctance, to the rank of gods. Mankind adopted the practice of Sabian idolatry, with an avowed consciousness, that they were departing from the principles of their forefathers.

That the heathen Britons felt this consciousness, we have had abundant proof. It may also be urged, from their own traditions and acknowledgements, that their Arkite superstition was a manifest corruption of better principles.

They had become so gross in their ideas, as to worship Hu the Mighty, or the patriarch, as a god. Yet they had not absolutely forgotten his true history. The Triads view him as a righteous man, and ascribe to him the actions of a man. Taliesin says of him and his family—"The just ones toiled: on the sea which had no land, long did they dwell: of their integrity it was, that they did not endure the extremity of distress."*

If they were preserved for their integrity, it must have been by some superintending power: and this power is acknowledged by the same Bard, in his song upon Dylan, where we find, that "A sole supreme God, most wise unfolder of secrets, most beneficent," had destroyed a profligate world, and preserved the righteous patriarch. And again: the sovereign, the supreme ruler of the land, extended his dominion over the shores of the world, or destroyed it by the deluge; but, at the same time, preserved the inclosure of the righteous patriarch in perfect security.†

So that the great Diluvian god, who was worshipped under the symbol of the bull and the dragon, and who was even identified with the luminary of the material heavens, is acknowledged to have been no other than a saint of the most high.

If such principles were admitted by heathens, when they came to the candid avowal of the truth, wherein did the great heinousness of heathenism, and its votaries, consist?

Not in an absolute ignorance of a great First Cause, and of his superintending Providence, but in giving his glory to another, and in acting against those better principles, which their own minds could not but acknowledge.

* Appendix, No. 10.

† Appendix, No. 3.

“ Because that which may be known of God, is manifest
 “ to them, for God hath shewed it unto them. For the “ invisible things of him; from the creation of the world, are “ clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, “ even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are “ without excuse: because that, when they knew God, they “ glorified him not, as God, neither were thankful; but “ became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart
 “ was darkened.

“ Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools,
 “ and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an “ image, made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and “ four-footed beasts, and creeping things—who changed the “ truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the “ creature, more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever.”*

Such is the view of this subject, communicated by a true philosopher, a good antiquary, and no mean scholar.

The human mind is prone to such woful lapses, when it gives way to vain imagination and self-conceit—to the opinions of fallible, or the views of designing men.

Thus, Druidism was removed but a few paces further from the religion of Noah, than popery, and some other modes of worship, denominated Christian, are departed from the faith, the purity, and the simplicity of the gospel. Wherefore it behoves all men, who build their hopes upon the religion of Christ, not to place an implicit confidence in the practice of a corrupt age, or in the principles of an arrogant and presumptuous teacher; but to have a constant eye to the foundation once laid by the apostles and prophets.

K K

* St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Chap. I.

Here another remark of some importance offers itself.

As Gentilism arose from a corruption of the patriarchal religion, it is reasonable to suppose, that amongst a multiplicity of errors and absurdities, it preserved some tincture of the venerable source from whence it sprung: in the same manner as popery is acknowledged still to possess some of the genuine forms and tenets of primitive Christianity; and a diligent comparison of heathen systems with the book of Job, and the first book of Moses, will evince that this was actually the case.

Whatever Gentilism had thus preserved without corruption, must be regarded as derived from the revelations vouchsafed to the patriarchs, and therefore, in its origin, of Divine authority, like those uncorrupted forms and tenets in popery, which are derived from the truth of the Gospel.

We are not, therefore, to conclude, a priori, that every form of sacrifice, every rite of purification, every sacred symbol, or even every fundamental doctrine, which may have prevailed amongst the ancient heathens, was of human device, and therefore could have nothing similar to it in the revealed will and ordinances of the Supreme Being. For this mode of argument would lead us to conclusions, as unjust as the cavils of those scrupulous persons, who assert, that the church of England must be superstitious, because it retains some of the forms of the church of Rome.

As this church has retained some of the institutes of true Christianity, so Gentilism had not lost every institute of the patriarchal religion: and these uncorrupted institutes are pure and sacred, notwithstanding the general corruption of the channels through which they have flowed.

Upon this ground, we may frame an answer to those adversaries of revelation, who having observed, that some modes of sacrifice, some rites of purification, some sacred symbols, and many other particulars, sanctioned in the writings of Moses and the prophets, have their parallel in the religion of Egypt, Syria, or Chaldea, boldly assert, that these things were adopted from the heathens, and, consequently, that the writings of the Old Testament, and the religion of the Jews, could not have been of Divine communication.

The answer is ready. As God had revealed his will, and instituted a form of worship, by the prophets of the primitive world, Adam, Enoch, and Noah, so, when the primitive religion was corrupted by the vanity and wickedness of mankind, he renewed this revelation to the Israelites by Moses, and the prophets of the Old Testament.

That Spirit, which has neither variableness nor shadow of turning, again inculcated to his chosen people the same expectation of the promised Redeemer, figured out by the same symbolical types, which had been communicated to the patriarchs. And as the Gentiles also had retained some vestiges of the true primitive religion, an occasional analogy between their forms and symbols, and those of the Israelites, was a consequence that necessarily followed.

As certain rites and symbols were enjoined to the Israelites, not because they were heathenish, but because they were patriarchal, and of divine institution, so they were not omitted, in consequence of the mere accident, that the Gentiles had retained them.

The word of God, that word, of which every jot and tittle must be fulfilled, never turns to the right hand, nor to the left—never gives way to the error, or the petulance of man.

From the general and unequivocal vestiges of Arkite mythology, which were impressed upon the heathen world, some other important inferences may be drawn.

As the united voice of the early ages, they forcibly recal the candid sceptic, if such there be, to the acknowledgment of the true, that is, the scriptural account of the deluge, and the consequent rejection of all those astronomical and geological fables, which plunge the origin of mankind into the abyss of unfathomable antiquity, and thus open the gap into the regions of darkness, and infidel delusion. Let reason only be consistent with itself, in exploring even the history of heathenism, and it must acknowledge the truth of our sacred oracles.

The general voice of mythology, to which I may now add that of the sequestered Briton, admits, that the personage who escaped in his bark from the great deluge, was distinguished from the mass of perishing mortals by a divine providence, and miraculously preserved, on account of his piety and righteousness.

This attestation to the character of the great patriarch, and from the mouth of heathenism itself, not only asserts the authenticity of his history, but also the truth of his religion, as a man whose faith and conduct were eminently approved by heaven. And this religion regarded man as morally responsible to one supreme and over-ruling God, who mercifully accepted the offerings and the persons of those who sincerely obeyed him, and pardoned their offences, through the merits of a Redeemer, announced to our first parents.

APPENDIX,
CONSISTING OF
ANCIENT POEMS AND EXTRACTS,
ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE Subjects
DISCUSSED IN THE PRECEDING ESSAY.
TO WHICH ARE ADDED,
SOME REMARKS
UPON
ANCIENT BRITISH COINS.

THESE poems and extracts from the ancient Bards, being illustrative of the several subjects discussed in the preceding Essay, are subjoined with the originals at large, for the satisfaction of the antiquarian reader.

No. I.

*A Song of Taliesin, concerning the Sons of Llŷr.

1.

Golychaf i Gulwydd, Arglwydd pob echen,
Arbennig torfoedd ynhyoedd am Ordden.
Ceint yn yspyddawd, uch gwirawd aflawen :
Ceint rhag meibion Llŷr, yn ebyr Hen Felen.
Gweleis treis trydar ac afar ac anghen :
Yd lethrynt lafnawr ar bennawr disgywen

* W. Archaiol. p. 66. Llŷr implies the sea, or the sea-beach. This name has a constant reference to the rites of the Diluvian god. It has been conferred upon his priests and eminent votaries. The sons of Llŷr may denote, in general, those who had been initiated in the mysteries of the Druids.

Ceint rhag Udd Clodeu, yn noleu Hafren;
 Rhag Brochwel Powys, a garwys fy awen.
 Ceint yn addfwyn rodle, ym more, rhag Urien;
 Yn ewydd am an traed gwaed ar ddiên.
 Neud amug ynghadeir o heir Ceridwen!
 Handid rydd fy nhafawd,
 Yn addawd gwawd Ogyrwen.

I will adore the love-diffusing Lord* of every kindred,
 the sovereign of hosts and powers, round the universe.

There has been a battle † at the feast, over the joyless beverage—a battle against the sons of Llyr, at the outlets of Hên Velen.

I saw the oppression of tumult, and wrath, and tribulation, when the blades gleamed on the glittering helmets in battle, against the Lord of Fame, in the dales of the Severn—against Brochwel ‡ of Powys, who loved my muse.

There was a battle in the glorious course, before Urien, § with the dawn: blood flowed in streams round our feet, when death prevailed.

Is not my chair protected by the cauldron of Ceridwen! ||

* The Bard speaks of one supreme God, as acknowledged by the ancient Druids, together with their subordinate divinities, Ceridwen, Elphin, &c. whose names occur in this poem.

† Of the three battles here mentioned, the first, namely, that against the sons of Llyr, or the Bards, at the feast seems to have been the same which took place in the avenues or outlets of Stonehenge, which is here called Hên Velen, the old Belenium, or temple of Apollo.—See the songs of the Gododin.

‡ Brochwel was prince of the country, about the dales of the Severn, in the sixth century. In his old age, he commanded the Britons in the memorable battle of Chester, A. D. 603.

§ Urien of Reged, a warlike prince of the sixth century. His fame is celebrated in many songs of Taliesin, and his death lamented by Llywarch-Hên.

|| The cauldron, and the sanctuary of Ceridwen, have been considered,
 Sect. 3 and 4.

Therefore, let my tongue be free, in the sanctuary of the praise of the goddess.

2.

Gwawd Ogyrwen Uferen rwy ddigones
 Arnunt, a llefrith a gwlith a mês.
 Ystyriem yn llwyr, cyn clwyr cyffes,
 Dyfod yn ddiheu anghau nês nês :
 Ac am diredd Enlli dyvi dylles ;
 Dyrchawr llongawr ar glawr aches.
 A galwn ar y gwr a'n digones,
 A'n nothwy rhag gwyth llwyth anghes.
 Pan alwer ynys Vôn tirion vaes,
 Gwyn eu byd hwy gwleiddion Saeson artrês.

The praise of the goddess is a mass,* which has completely atoned for them, WITH NEW MILK, AND DEW, AND ACORNS.

Let us ponder deeply, before confession is heard, that death is evidently approaching nearer and nearer, and that for the lands of Bardsey, † there will be an inroad.—A fleet shall rise on the face of the water. Let us then call upon him whom we have found sufficient, that he may protect us from the wrath of the alien race.

When the Isle of Mona shall be called a pleasant field, ‡ then happy the lot of the meek nation, whom the Saxons oppress.

* Or oblation, in behalf of the fallen warriors.

In this passage, we may remark the bigotry with which the Bards continued to honour the imaginary gods of their forefathers, notwithstanding they acknowledged the being of one love-diffusing Lord of the universe. Are there not nominal Christians in the present day, chargeable with practices no less absurd or impious!

† It appears from several passages, that this spot, as well as Mona, was sacred to the ancient superstition.

‡ Thus Merddin, the Caledonian, in his Avallennau.—"When Dyvnant shall be named the city of stones, the Bard shall receive his perquisite."

3.

Doddwyf Deganhwy i anryson
 A Maelgwn, mwyaf ei achwyson :
 Ellyngais fy Arglwydd, yngwydd Deon ;
 Elphin Pendefig, ri hodigion.
 Yssid imi deir cadeir, cyweir, cysson ;
 Ac yd frawd parhauw gan Gerddorion.
 Bâm ynghat Goddeu, gan Lleu a Gwydion,
 Wy a rithwys gwydd elfydd ag elestron.
 Bâm i gan Vrân yn Iwerddon.
 Gweleis pan laddwyd morddwyd Tyllon.
 Cigleu gyfarfod am gerddorion,
 A Gwyddyl, diefyl diferogion.
 O Benrhyn Vleth hyd Luch Rëon,
 Cymry yn unfryd, gwrhyd wrion.

I came to Teganwy to maintain the contest with Maelgwn,* the greatest of delinquents : in the presence of Dëon † (the Distributor), I liberated my Lord, even Elphin, ‡ the sovereign of those who carry ears of corn. §

I have three presidencies, complete and concordant, and till the doom shall they remain with the tuneful tribe. ¶ I was in the battle of purposes with Lleu and Gwydion, ¶¶ who set

* The Maglocunus of Gildas—Lord of North Wales; from A. D. 517, to 546, and then nominal sovereign of the Britons, to the time of his death, about the year 560.

† A title of Hu, Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Helio-arkite god. Thus Appendix, No. 11.

“ O Hu, with the expanded wings—O father Dëon !”

‡ See his character and connexions in the 3d Section.

§ That is, the priests or votaries of Ceres.

¶ Or masters of Bardic lore.

¶¶ Lleu, the luminary, was the father of Minauc, the Diluvian patriarch; Gwydion was the British Hermes. See the Chair of Ceridwen, in Sect. 3. By setting in order the elementary trees, is implied, laying the first foundation of written memorials.

in order the elementary trees and plants.* I was with Brán † in Ireland. I saw when the thigh of Tyllon was cut. I heard the conference, respecting the Bards, with the Gwyddelian, polluted fiends.

From the promontory of Bleth ‡ to Lluch Rëon, the Cymry are of one mind, exercising fortitude.

4.

Gwaret dy Gymry ynghymelri !
 Teir cenedl gwythlawn, o iawn deithi,
 Gwyddyl, a Brython, a Rhomani,
 A wahan dyhedd a dyvysgi :
 Ac am derfyn Prydein, cein ei threfi,
 Ceint rhag teyrnedd, uch medd lestri,
 Yngheinion Dëon, i'm a'i dyroddi :
 A'n dwy ben sywed Cêd ryferthi.
 Ys cyweir fy nghadeir, ynghaer Sidi :
 Nis plawdd haint a henaint a fo yndi.
 Ys gwyr Manawyd a Phryderi,
 Tair Orian, y am dan, a gan rhegddi ;
 Ac am ei banneu ffrydieu gweilgi,
 A'r ffynawn ffrwythlawn yssydd odducthi,

* Elestron, more particularly, mean the water lilies, or flags—the Lotos of the Druids.

† Bran ap Llŷr, Raven, son of the sea, was the traditional father of the celebrated Caractacus. He first introduced the mystical cauldron into Ireland, probably with a view to secure his mysteries from the persecutions of the invading Romans.—See Turner's Vindic. p. 283.

The name of this Diluvian priest is referable to the raven of Noah.

Our mystical Bard, like Pythagoras of old, pretends to have been present in the transactions of various ages. As he held in the doctrine of Metempsychosis, he blended his own personal character, with that of the Taliesins, or priests of the sun, who had gone before him.

‡ Perhaps Blatum of the Itinerary—Bulnis, at the West end of the wall of Severus. Lluch Rëon, the chief seat of the Northern Druids.—See Sect. 5.

One of the great maxims of the Druids was—Αὐδῆσαι ἀσκήειν, to exercise fortitude. Diog. Laert.

Ys whegach no'r gwin gwyn y llyn yndi—
 Ac wedi ath iolaf, Oruchaf, cyn gweiyd,
 Gorod cymmod a thi!

Deliver thou the Cymry, in the hour of tribulation! Three tribes, cruel from native disposition, the Gwyddelians, the Britons,* and the Romans, disturb our tranquillity with their tumults: and round the borders of Britain, with its fair dwellings, they contend for the sovereignty, over vessels of mead, † even in the pavilions of the distributor, who bestowed it upon me. The inundation will surround us, the chief priests of Kêd.

Yet complete is my chair in Caer Sidi, ‡ neither disorder nor age will oppress him that is within it. It is known to Manawyd and Pryderi, that three loud strains round the fire, will be sung before it, whilst the currents of the sea are round its borders, and the copious fountain is open from above, the liquor within it is sweeter than delicious wine.

And after I shall have worshipped thee, O thou Most High, before I am covered with the sod, may I be found in covenant with thee! §

* The Brython, when distinguished from the Cymry, or primitive inhabitants, seem to have been the Belgian tribes, whom the Triads place in the North, as well as the South of Britain.

† An allusion to the bloody feast, on the Cursus, at Stonehenge, where Dion, or Hu, held his court. Taliesin, as chief Druid, and vicegerent of this god, and of Kêd, or Ceres, claims the sovereignty of the British Island. Had his religion been in full establishment, he would have been acknowledged as supreme judge, from whose decree there would have been no appeal. Merddin was styled Supreme Judge of the North, in the sixth century.

‡ In this passage, our Bard borrows his imagery from Diluvian mythology, and represents his sanctuary as a type of the ark.

§ This sentiment often occurs in the old Bards.—It seems to express some degree of dissatisfaction in their heathenish mummery, and to import a vow of becoming Christians, sometime before their death.—See the first stanza of the following poem.

No. II.

*A Poem of Taliesin, called MIC DINBYCH, a View of the Bardic Sanctuary.

1.

Archaf y wen i Dduw plwyf esgori.
 Perchen nêv a llawr, pwyll fawr wofri,
 Addfwyn Gaer y sydd, ar Glawr Gweilgi;
 Bid llawen ynghalan eirian y ri:
 Ac amser pan wna môr mawr wrhydri,
 Ys gnawd gorun Beirdd uch medd lestri.
 Dyddybydd gwaneg, ar frys, dybrys iddi,
 A ddaw hwynt i werlas o glas Fichti:
 Ac am bwyf, O Ddews, dros fy ngweddi,
 Pan gattwyf ammod cymmod a thi!

I will address my prayer to God, that he would deliver our community. †—

O thou Proprietor of heaven and earth, to whom great wisdom is attributed, a holy sanctuary there is on the surface of the ocean: may its chief be joyful in the splendid festival, and at the time when the sea rises with expanding energy!

Frequently does the surge assail the Bards, over their vessels of mead: and on the day when the billows are excited, may this inclosure skim away, though the billows come beyond the green spot, from the region of the Picts. ‡

And, O God! May I be, for the sake of my prayer, though I preserve my institute, in covenant with thee!

* W. Archaiol. p. 67.

† The whole language of this Bardic prayer, is strongly tinged with the Diluvian, or Arkite lore of the Druids.

‡ The same Northern people with the Brython, mentioned in the preceding poem.

2.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd, ar lydan llyn,
 Dinas diachor, môr a'i cylchyn.
 Gvgyvarch ti, Prydein, cwdd gyngain hyn?
 Blaen llyn ab Erbin boed teu vöyn :
 Bu gosgordd, a bu cerdd, yn eil mehyn,
 Ac eryr, uch wybr, allwybr Granwyn,
 Rhag Udd ffelig, nag esgar gychwyn,
 Clod wasgar, a Gwanar ydd ymddullyn.

A holy sanctuary there is, on the wide lake; a city not protected with walls; the sea surrounds it. Demandest thou, O Britain, to what this can be meetly applied! Before the lake of the son of Erbin, let thy ox be stationed*—there, where there has been a retinue, and in the second place, a procession, and an eagle aloft in the sky, and the path of Granwyn before the pervading sovereign, who would not deviate for the tumult of those who disparage our praise, though they were marshalled by their leader.

3.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd ar don nawfed,
 Addfwyn ei gwerin yn ymwarded :
 Ni wnant eu dwyn cyt, trwy fehlhäed ;
 Nit ef eu defawd bod yn galed.
 Ni lefaraf au, ar fy nhrwydded :

* The Bard, by an enigmatical description, reminds his countrymen of the ancient solemnities connected with the insular sanctuary.—1. The sacred ox of the patriarch, the Ych Banawg, is stationed before the lake, ready to draw the Avanc or Shrine to land, out of its watery repository.—2. It is the lake of Eraint ab Erbin, or of ³the vessel of the lofty chiefs.—3. The retinue of priests assembled on the occasion, and joined in the mystical procession.—4. The eagle, or symbol of the sun, was placed aloft in the sky, that is, in the open æthereal temple, which is often so called.—5. There was the representation of the path of Granwyn, or Apollo—an image of the ecliptic, in which the pomp was conducted, preceded by the waving eagle.—And 6, this was done in the presence of the great sovereign, or the sun himself—that is, it was a diurnal celebration, which commenced at the dawn.—See No. 6.

Nog eillion deudraeth gwell caeth Dyved.
 Cyweithydd o rydd wledd waredied ;
 Cynnwys rhwng pob deu goreu ciwed.

A holy sanctuary there is, upon the ninth wave. Holy are its inhabitants, in preserving themselves. They will not associate in the bonds of pollution. It is not their established custom to act with severity. I will not abuse my privilege, in declaring a falsehood. The restrained man of *Dyved is better than the shaved ones, of the two strands.

If our associate gives the banquet of the Preservers; † mutual harmony amongst brethren is the best society.

4.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd: a'i gwna cyman,
 Meddut, a molut, ac adar ban.
 Llyfn ei cherddau, yn ei chalan:
 A'm Arglwydd hywydd, Hëwr eirian,
 Cyn ei fyned yn ei adwyd, yn derfyn llan,
 Ef a'm rhoddes medd a gwîn o wydrin ban.

A holy sanctuary there is—it is rendered complete by the rehearsal, the hymn and the birds of the mountain. ‡ Smooth are its lays, in its periodical festival: and my lord, § duly observant of the splendid mover, before he entered his earthly cell, in the border of the circle, gave me mead and wine out of the deep crystal cup.

5.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd yn yr Eglan ;
 Addfwyn y rhoddir, i bawb, ei ran.

* Demetia, Pembrokeshire, and the neighbouring districts.

† The Cabiri, the deities of Arkite mythology.—See Cadair Ceridwen, in the third Section.

‡ The Bard distinguishes three particulars in the business of his sanctuary. 1. The rehearsal of ancient lore. 2. The chanting of hymns, in honour of the gods. 3. The interpretation of their will, by birds of augury.

§ The hierophant, by whom the Bard had been initiated, and of whom he had received the mead and wine, or the Kυκλιωυ of the British Ceres.

Adwen, yn Ninbych, gorwen Gwylan,
 Cyweithydd wleiddydd, Udd Erlyssan:
 Oedd ef fy nevawd i, nos Galan,
 Lleddfawd y gân ri, ryfel eiran,
 A llen, lliw ehoeg, a meddu prain;
 Hyn a wyf tafawd ar feirdd Prydain.

A holy sanctuary there is, within the gulf; there, every one is kindly presented with his portion.

I knew the eminently white *sea-mew in Dinbych—the meek associate—the lord of the supreme court: it was my custom to attend, on the eve of the festival, to what the ruler sweetly sung (the war of the splendid one†) with my robe of bright green,‡ possessing a place in the assembly. Hence my word is paramount over the Bards of Britain.

6.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd, a'i cyffrwy Ced wn;
 Oedd meu ei rhydaü, a ddewiswn.
 Ni lyfaraf i daith rhaith rysgattwn:
 Ní ddyly celennig ni wyppo hwn.
 Ysgrifen Brydain, bryder briffwn,
 Yn yd wna tonneu eu hamgyffrwn,
 Pe reit, hyd bell i gell attreiddwn.

* By the description which is given of this sea-mew, it is evident, he was no other than the hierophant, or chief Druid, mentioned above. Hywel, the son of Owen, describes the Druids under the same figure. The choice of this aquatic bird as their symbol, arose from their Arkite rites, and Diluvian mythology. Amongst the ancients, the sea-mew was the symbol of Minerva, as an Arkite goddess.—See Faber's Cabiri, V. I. p. 106, 185, &c.

The sanctuary, or sacred island, which was fabled to have wandered from place to place, like the ark of old, now fixes itself upon the border of the flood, and proves to be the insular spot, now containing the town of Tenby, in Pembrokeshire: for it is evident, from what the Bard had said before, that he means Dinbych, in Dyved. This is but a small distance from Arberth, High Grove, the chief seat of the mystical Pwyll. See Sect. V.

† Probably, some ancient and sacred poem upon the adventures of the Helio-arkite god.

‡ Green was the colour of the ovate, or of him who had already been initiated into the first principles of Bardism. See Owen's Dict. V. Glain and Oydd.

A holy sanctuary there is, with its productions of the vessel of Kêd*—I possessed myself of its courses, which I had made my choice. I will not disclose the progress of the law, which I religiously observe. He who knows not this, is not entitled to the perquisite at the festival.

The writings of Britain† are the first object of anxious regard: should the waves disturb their foundation, I would again, if necessary, conceal them deep in the cell.

7.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd yn arddwyrein :
 Gochawn y meddut y molut gyfrein.
 Addfwyn, ar ei hôr, esgor gynrhein.
 Godde gwrych dymbi, hîr ei hadein,
 Dychyrch bar carreg, creg ei hadnein.
 Llid y mewn tynged: treidded troth mein;
 A bleiddud gorllwyd goreu affein.
 Dimpyner, odduch pwy, Lllad cofein.
 Bendith culwydd nef gydllef afein
 Arnyn, gwnel yn frowyr gorwyr Owein.

A holy sanctuary there is, exalting itself on high. The small reeds, with joined points, declare its praise: fair, in its borders, the first points shoot forth.

* The cauldron of inspiration, implying the mysteries of Bardism. See Sect. III.

† Or writings of Prydain, who was the same as Hu. See No. 11. We may gather from hence, that the Druids had certain ancient writings, which they deemed more sacred by far, and of greater importance, than those songs and tales, which were made public, or recited in the ears of the people. These writings had already been concealed in times of persecution, probably during the Roman government: and they were known only to the Druids, or Bards of the highest order; for Taliesin tells us, that in case of necessity, he possessed the effectual means of concealing them again. We can only guess, in general, that these arcana comprehended the sacred history, and rituals of the Druids, together with the rules of divination, and most mysterious doctrines of the ancient priesthood.

From the beginning of the next stanza, it appears that this code was composed in the mystical characters of the Bards, consisting of reeds, and the points, and shoots of trees. To this kind of writing Taliesin alludes, when he says—"I know every reed, or twig, in the cave of the chief diviner."

A cormorant approaches me,* with long wings. She assaults the top of the stone with her hoarse clamour.— There is wrath in the fates! Let it burst through the stones! Contention is meet only amongst the grey wolves. The memorials of Llâd shall be secured from the assault. May the blessing of the beneficent Ruler of heaven, who is harmoniously praised in the heights, be upon them; and may he make the late posterity of Owen possessors of the land!

8.

Addfwyn Gaer y sydd ar lan Lliant :
 Addfwyn yd roddir i bawb i chwant.
 Gogyfarch ti fyned—boed teu fwyant—
 Gwaywawr ryn rein a dderllyssant.
 Duw Merchyr gweleis wyr ynghyfnofant :
 Dyfieu bu gwarthau a amugant.
 Ag ydd oedd friger coch ag och ardent
 Oedd lludwed fyned dydd y doethant.
 Ac am gefn Llech Vaelwy cylchwy friwant.
 Cwyddyn y gan gefn llu o Garant.

A holy sanctuary there is, upon the margin of the flood: there shall every one be kindly presented with his wishes.

I warn thee to depart! † Thou be prosperous! Spearmen, with vibrating spears, will occupy the spot. On the day of Mercury, I saw men in mutual enjoyment: on the day

* Here we perceive the augur in the solemn exercise of his divining art—the cormorant, a bird of ill omen, denounces an approaching persecution. The Druid comprehends the hint, and conceals his sacred memorials. Llâd, in other passages, is a name of the Arkite goddess. In Taliesin's Angar Cyvyn-dawd, she is represented as the mother of the Celtic Apollo. Her memorials seem to imply the same thing as the writings of Prydain, mentioned above.

† After the Bard had received the omen from the cormorant, and concealed his memorials, he still persists in celebrating his holy sanctuary, till he is interrupted by a repeated message from some bird of augury, protecting spirit, or brother Druid, who seems to speak to the end of the stanza.

of Jove, there was a disparagement of what they had protected.

The hair was red with blood, and there was clamorous woe. There were funeral processions on the day when they arrived. They will break the circle behind the flat stone of Maelwy. Let the multitude of our friends retire:

No. III.

*A Poem of Taliesin, called PREIDDEU ANNWN, The Spoils of the Deep.

I HAVE had repeated occasion to mention this piece in the preceding sections: but before I insert it at length, it may be proper to observe, that Mr. Turner has introduced it in his Vindication, with the following preface:

“ There is so much of Taliesin’s poetry, which no one can understand, that I cannot but place him, in point of intrinsic merit, below the other Bards; although, in the estimation of his countrymen, he seems to have been ranked in a superior class. His Cad Goddeu, The Battle of the Trees, is eminently incomprehensible; and so are others. That I may not be thought to condemn him unjustly, I will beg leave to present the reader with his poem, called Preiddeu Annwn, The Spoils of Annwn.

“ If its allusions are at all historical, they are too much involved in mythology, to be comprehended. In his mead song, there is a connected train of thought: in the following poem, all connexion of thought seems to have been studiously avoided.”

L L

* W. Archæiol. p. 45.

The author adds this note.

“ It is, however, fair to remark, that if the Mabinogion, and all the Welsh remains, were to be accurately studied, it is propable, that enough might be gathered from them, to elucidate some of the allusions of Taliesin to the opinions, tales, and traditions of his day. This would make intelligible many passages, now obscure.”

I may be thought rather too adventurous, in encountering this select specimen of incomprehensibility, which was no less enigmatical to the chair of Glamorgan, than to the learned Vindicator of the Bards: but if I succeed in pointing out a due connexion of thought throughout the poem; if I can satisfactorily prove, that the Bard alludes, with consistency and accuracy, to the mysteries of the British Bacchus and Ceres; that he connects these mysteries with Diluvian mythology; and that he represents them as the basis of the Bardic or Druidical system; then I may be allowed to presume, that I possess the true key to the mystical poems, and to the adytum of British superstition. At the same time, I am ready to admit, that another hand might be more dexterous in moving the rusty wards, which guard these mysteries.

In order to make the experiment, I shall, first of all, state, that the subject of the poem is the mythology of the deluge, and the mysteries which were celebrated in commemoration of it.

PREIDDEU ANNWN.

1.

Golychaf wledig, pendefig, gwlad ri.
Pe ledas y pennaeth, tros draeth Mundi;

Bu cywair carchar Gwair, ynghaer Sidi.

Trwy ebostol Pwyll a Phrýderi,

Neb cyn nog ef nid aeth iddi.

Y gadwyn dromlas, cywirwas, ai cedwi;

A rhag preiddeu Annwfa tost yd geni:

Ac, yd frawd, parahawd yn Barddweddi;

Tri lloneid Prydwen ydd aetham ni iddi;

Namyn Saith, ni dyrraith o Gaer Sidi.

“ I will adore the sovereign, the supreme ruler of the “ land. If he extended his dominion over the shores of “ the world, yet in good order was the prison of Gwair,
“ in the inclosure of Sidi. Through the mission of Pwyll
“ and Pryderi, no one before him entered into it.

“ The heavy blue chain didst thou, O just man, endure:
“ and for the spoils of the deep, woful is thy song; and “ till the doom shall it remain in the Bardic prayer—Thrice
“ the number that would have filled Prydwen, we entered into
“ the deep; excepting seven, none have returned from Caer
“ Sidi.”

In this first stanza, we find the Bard acknowledging the existence of one supreme God, and declaring his resolution to adore him, because he had shewn respect to Gwair, the just man, and preserved the inclosure of Caer Sidi, in which he had shut him up, at the time when he extended his dominions over the shores of the world, or sent forth the universal deluge. The Supreme Being was, therefore, adored for his beneficent providence, which had distinguished the just man, and preserved him through a calamity which overwhelmed the world. This, I conceive, was a genuine principle of the patriarchal religion.

I have already observed, that Gwair, the principal person who escaped this catastrophe, was the patriarch Noah. The Triads represent this Gwair, with his family, as confined in the prison of Oeth ag Anoeth, wrath, and the remission of wrath, from which none of his descendants, to the latest posterity, attempted to escape. The allegory implies, that as the patriarch, with his family, had been shut up in the ark, so the Druids acknowledged those only as his legitimate descendants, who were brought within the pale of Arkite mysteries, and who religiously preserved the laws of their institution.

The prison of Gwair is here called Caer Sidi. This has been explained above, as implying, in the first place, the ark, in which the patriarch and his family were inclosed; secondly, the circle of the zodiac, in which their luminous emblems, the sun, moon, and planets, revolved; thirdly, the sanctuary of the British Ceres, which represented both the ark and the zodiac.

The other Caers, mentioned in the conclusion of the several stanzas, are allusive to the same history, and may be regarded as so many titles of the ark: thus,

Caer Bediwyd, the inclosure of the inhabitants of the world—the ark, which contained all that was living; or, Caer Mediwyd, the inclosure of the perfect ones, or of the just family.

Caer Ri-gor, the inclosure of the royal assembly—of the patriarch and his sons, who were kings of the world.

Caer Gelur, the gloomy inclosure—the ark, which was closed up, so as to exclude the light.

Caer Vandwy, the inclosure resting on the height.

Caer Ochren, the inclosure whose side produced life.

The patriarch entered his inclosure, through the mission, or apostleship (which, I fear, implies a profane scoff at the gospel), of Pwyll and Pryderi, reason or prudence, and serious meditation. It has been seen, that these ideas were personified in British mythology, and that their history relates to the deluge and Arkite mysteries. In the vale of the Boat, Pwyll was met by Arawn, Pendaran, the Arkite memorate that sacred vessel, which, amongst its multitude of names, had that of Caer Wydr.

5.

Ni obrynaf i llawyr llaes eu cylchwy.

Ni wyddant hwy py ddydd peridydd pwy,

Py awr, ym meinddydd, y ganed Cwy,

Pwy gwnaeth ar nid aeth doleu Devwy.

Ni wddant hwy yr ych brych, bras ei benrhwy,

Seith ugein cygwn yn ei aerwy—

A phan aetham ni gan Arthur, afrddwl gofwy;

Namyn saith, ni ddyrraith o Gaer Vandwy.

“ I will not redeem the multitudes with trailing shields.
 “ They knew not on what day the stroke would be given, “ nor what hour in the serene day, Cwy (the agitated per“ son) would be born, or who prevented his going into the “ dales of Devwy (the possession of the water). They “ know not the brindled ox with the thick head-band, “ having seven score knobs in his collar.—And when we “ went with Arthur, of mournful memory; excepting seven,
 “ none returned from Caer Vandwy.”

Taliesin here reprobates those inhabitants of the old and new world, who fled with trailing shields, or wanted the invincible fortitude of Bardism. Providence had not discovered to the former, on what day the fatal stroke of the deluge would be given; at what time the patriarch, who was tossed upon the waters, would be born again from his vessel, or who prevented his sinking to those dales, which were covered with the deluge.

The latter knew not the brindled ox, &c.

In almost every British memorial of the deluge, the ox is introduced. The oxen of Hu the Mighty drew the beaver out of the lake, and prevented the repetition of the deluge.

And an ox or bull, as I have shewn in the second section, was the symbol of the Helio-arkite god.

Whatever is to be understood by the knobs, in the collar of this brindled ox, it must be observed, that seven score, or seven score and seven, constituted a sacred number with the Druids, or ancient Bards. Thus Taliesin says, that seven score Ogyroens, or mystical personages, pertain to the British muse. The mystical trees exhibited to Merddin, were 147: and the stones which completed the great temple on Salisbury plain, are computed at 140. If the sacred ox was kept in this temple, the stones of the fabric may have been described, as composing his ring, or collar. By not knowing this ox, the Bard implies an ignorance of Arkite mysteries, or of the Druidical religion.

6.

Ni obrynaf i lawyr llaes eu gehen.
 Ni wddant py ddydd peridydd Pen:
 Py awr, ym meinddydd, y ganed Perchen;
 Py fîl a gadwant ariant y pen—
 Pan aetham ni gan Arthur, afrddwl gynhen;
 Namyn saith, ni ddyrraith o Gaer Ochren.

“ I will not redeem the multitudes with unguarded “ mouths. They know not on what day the chief was “ appointed: on what hour in the serene day, the propri“ etor was born; or what animal it is, which the silver-“ headed ones protect—

“ When we went with Arthur into the mournful conflict;
 “ excepting seven, none returned from Caer Ochren.”

The persons of unguarded mouths, were those who violated the oath of secrecy, administered to them before their initiation. The chief and the proprietor are titles of the deified patriarch, and of his representative in the mysteries: and the animal was the symbolical ox, mentioned in the preceding stanza, which was kept by the hoary Druids.

7.

Mynaich dychnud, fal cun in cor,
O gyfranc uddudd ai gwyddanhor—
Ai un hynt gwynt: ai un dwfr mor:
Ai un ufel tan, twrwf diachor!

“ Monks congregate, like dogs in their kennel, wrangling
“ with their instructors.—

“ Is there but one course to the wind—but one to the “ water of the sea! Is there but one spark in the fire of “ boundless energy.

Taliesin having asserted the merit of his own system, proceeds in this, and the concluding stanza, to reprove the monks, the determined adversaries of the Bards, for their illiberality and their ignorance. He seems to say—Though one may be right, it does not follow, that the person who thinks differently must be wrong.—“ Is there but one course “ to the wind, &c.

8.

Myneich dychnud fal bleiddiawr,
O gyfranc uddudd ai gwyddyanhawr.
Ni wddant pan ysgar deweint a gwawr;
Neu wynt pwy hynt, pwy ei rynnawr;
Py va ddifa, py dir y plawr.
Bed sant yn ddifant o bet allawr:
Golychaf i Wledig, Pendevig Mawr!

“ Monks congregate like wolves, wrangling with their “ instructors. They know not when the darkness and the “ dawn divide; nor what is the course of the wind, or the “ cause of its agitation; in what place it dies away, or on “ what region it expands.

“ The grave of the saint is vanishing from the foot of “ the altar: I will adore the SOVEREIGN, the GREAT “ SUPREME!”

This is the proper conclusion of the poem, and it has something of sublimity. The Bard had introduced his subject, with a resolution to adore the Great Supreme, who had preserved the just man from the waters of the deluge; and he closes with the same sentiment.

Some idle copyist, however, as usual, has added a Christian idea, in a verse which disagrees with what has gone before, in language, in mètre, and in final rhyme—

Na bwyf trist, Crist am gwaddawl.

“ That I be not sorrowful, may Christ be my portion.”

No. IV.

IN the Celtic Researches, I have observed, that Tydain Tad Awen—Titan, the father of inspiration, the third of the chief regulators; and Angar, the fountain of heat, the son of Ladon, and the third of the equal judges, corresponded in character with Apollo. Yet Tydain and Angar are evidently connected with the Arkite theology of the Britons. The former had his tomb, or shrine, in the hill of Aren; and Mr. Bryant informs us, that Aren was the ark.

Ladon, the mother of Angar, was no other than Latona; and the same great mythologist assures us, that Isis, the Arkite goddess, and Latona, were the same personage.

This solar divinity of the Britons appears again in a poem of Taliesin, with the title Teyrn On, the sovereign ON. And he still retains the same ordinate rank, being described as the third deep mystery of the sage.

A passage in Taliesin's poem, on the rod of Moses, connects this On with the Egyptian divinity, On, or Helios. The patriarch Joseph had married a daughter of the priest, or prince, of On, which is also called Heliopolis; and thus he had become the son of this prince. And the Bard says of Joseph,

“ The son of Teyrn On collected treasures from his associates, and the sons of Jacob had those treasures in possession.”

The poem, which commemorates the Helio-arkite divinity by this name, is entitled Cadair Teyrn On, the chair of the sovereign On. It is curious upon many accounts, and particularly as it was composed upon a memorable occasion, the inauguration of the renowned Arthur. I shall therefore give it entire.

KADAIR TEYRN ON.*

I.

Areit awdl eglur,
 Awen tra messur,
 Am gwr deu awdwr,
 O echen Aladur,
 A'i ffonsai, a'i ffwr,
 A'i rëon rechdur,
 A'i ri rhwyfiadur,
 A'i rif ysgrythwr,
 A'i goch, gochlesswr,
 A'i ergyr dros fwr,

* W. Archaiol. p. 65.

A'i gadair gymmesswr,
 Ymhlith gosgordd mwr.
 Neus dug o gawmwr,
 Meirch gwelw gostrodwr,
 Teyrn On, henwr,
 Heilyn Pasgadwr,
 Trededd dofn doethwr,
 I fendigaw Arthur.

The declaration of the luminous strain, of the unbounded Awen (Bardic muse), concerning the person of two origins,* of the race of Al Adur,† with his divining staff, and his pervading glance, and his neighing coursers, and his regulator of kings, and his potent number, and his blushing purple, and his vaulting over the boundary, and his appropriate chair, amongst the established train.

Lo, he is brought from the firm inclosure,‡ with his light-coloured bounding steeds—even the sovereign ON, the ancient, the generous feeder,§ the third profound object of the sage, to pronounce the blessing upon Arthur.

* Alluding, perhaps, to the double birth of the Arkite god. Thus Dionusius (Noah) was styled Διφους. Or else, the Bard may have had an eye to the mystical union of the patriarch and the sun.

† רַגְדָּאֵל, The Glorious God.

I shall not undertake to explain the various particulars introduced in this passage: only, I suppose, that by the solar god's vaulting over the boundary, the Bards intimated his crossing the equator. This may have been represented by some mystic rite. Diodorus tells us, that Apollo had his appropriate chair in the great Hyperborean temple, which antiquaries, of no mean name, pronounce to have been no other than the famous structure of Stonchenge. There the god amused himself with a dance, once in nineteen years, amongst his established train. As it was the known practice for certain priests, in the celebration of the mysteries, personally to represent the sun and moon, I conjecture that the Druids, in their great festival of the cycle, dressed up a pageant of their own order, to personate this luminous divinity.

‡ Cawr mŵr, firm inclosure, or strong boundary, seems to mean the firmament.

§ Or, Heilin the Feeder, the solar divinity, whom the Bards always place in the third rank.

2.

Arthur fendigad,
 Ar gerdd gyfaenad,
 A'r wyneb ynghad,
 Arnaw bystylad!
 Pwy y tri chynweissad,
 Awerchedwis gwlad?
 Pwy y tri chyfarwydd,
 A gedwis arwydd,
 A ddaw wrth awydd,
 Erbyn eu harglwydd?

Arthur! may he be blessed, according to the lore of the society,* when his face meets the battle, which wantonly assaults him!

Who are the three chief ministers, who have defended the country? Who are the three experienced men, who having preserved the token, are coming with alacrity to meet their lord?

3.

Ban rinwedd rotwydd,
 Ban fydd hyn hoywedd.
 Ban corn cerddetrwydd:
 Ban biw, wrth echwydd:
 Ban gwir, pan ddisgleir;
 Bannach pan lefair.
 Ban, pan ddoeth o bair
 Ogyrven, Awen teir.
 Bum Mynawg, mynweir,
 Ynghorn i'm neddair:

M M

* Apollo is here introduced in person, as pronouncing the solemn benediction, and calling his chosen votaries into his presence, to join in the celebration of mystic rites.

The remainder of the poem is put into the mouth of the priest, who represents this divinity.

Ni ddlyly cadair,
 Ni gatwo fy ngair.
 Cadeir gennyf glaer,
 Awen hyawdl daer.

Eminent is the virtue of the free course, when *this dance is performed. Loud is the horn of the lustrator, when the kine † move in the evening. Manifest is truth when it shines; more manifest when it speaks; and loud it spoke, when it came forth from the cauldron of Awen, the ardent goddess.

I have been Mynawg, ‡ wearing the collar, and carrying my horn in my hand. He is not entitled to the presidency, who will not keep my decree. I hold the splendid chair of the eloquent, the ardent Awen.

4.

Pwy yw enw y teir caer,
 Rhwng lliant a llaer?
 Nis gwyr, ni fo taer,
 Eissillut eu Maer.
 Pedair caer yssydd
 Ym Mhrydain Powyssedd:
 Rhieu Merwerydd.
 Am ni fo, md fydd:
 Nid fydd, am nid fo.
 Llynghessawr a fo;
 Tohid gwaneg tra gro,
 Tir dylyn, dir, bo
 Nag allt nag ado,
 Na bryn na thyno,

* The dance, in which Apollo joined with his votaries.

† The kine of Ceres, which drew her ark, or chest. Her procession seems to have commenced in the evening, as that of the solar divinity did in the morning. See No. 6.

‡ Or Minauc—the deified patriarch—and hence his priest and representative.

Na rhynnawd Godo,
 Rhag gwynt, pan sorho;
 Cadeira Teyrn On:
 Celfydd rwy catwo.

What are the names of the three Caers,* between the flowing and the ebbing tide? The man of slow intellect recognizes not the offspring of their president. Four Caers† there are, stationary, in Britain: their governors are agitators of fire.

As for what may not be, it will not be—It will not be, because it may not be.‡

Let him (On) be the conductor of his fleet §—then, were the billows to overwhelm beyond the strand, so that of firm land there should indeed remain neither cliff nor defile, nor hill nor dale, nor the smallest sheltering cover from the wind, when its fury is roused; yet the sovereign ON will protect his chair: skilful is he who guards it.

5.

Ceissitor yngno!
 Ceissitor Cedig,
 Cedwyr colledig.
 Tebygaf ddull dîg;
 O ddifa Pendefig,
 O ddull difynnig;
 O Leon lluryg,
 Dyrchafawd Gwledig.
 Am derwyn Hen Enwig,

M M 2

* Insular sanctuaries. See the Essay, Sect. II. and Append No. II. and VI. The Bard may also allude to the sacred rafts; or boats. See Sect. III.

† Sanctuaries, containing the cells of the sacred fire.

‡ A curious specimen of Druidical logic.

§ The pageant means to say—"Were the world to be again overwhelmed, as at the deluge, yet the Arkite sanctuary, the chair of the Helio-arkite god should remain in security.

Breuhawd bragawd brîg—
 Breuhawd eissorig.
 Orig, a merin,
 Am derfyn chwefrin,
 Ieithoedd eddein,
 Mordwyaid merin.
 Aches ffysgiolin
 O blan Seraphin,
 Dogyn, dwfn, diwerin,
 Dyllyngein Elphin.

There let them be sought! Let application be made to Kedig,* for the men of Ked,† who have been lost.

When it seemed most likely that, in a wrathful manner, the nobility would be destroyed, with lacerated forms, then, clad in legionary mail, a sovereign was exalted.

Round the ancient and renowned focus, the shooting sprigs were broken: they were broken into tallies.‡

“ A moment, and they shall dissolve! Round the borders, the severe speeches of the roving sea adventurers shall vanish away.

“ A quick gliding train of radiant seraphim, in due order, mysterious and pure, shall deliver Elphin.”

* The same as Kéd, the Arkite goddess, whose renovating cauldron could restore the slain to life: but, at the same time, it deprived them of utterance, or obliged them to take an oath of secrecy. See Turner's Vindic. p. 283.

‡ The efficacy of this cauldron is here illustrated, by the energy which was displayed by a prince of the Bardic order, after the massacre of the nobles.

† Or warriors.

‡ This passage describes the rite of sortilege—the concluding lines contain the vaticination, deduced from the experiment.

No. V.

IN the last poem, we have seen the solar divinity, as personified and represented by his priest and namesake, Taliesin, connected with the Arkite superstitions of the Britons.

There is also reason to conclude, that the magi of Britain, like those of Persia, worshipped the sun, under the name and character of fire. Let the reader form his judgment upon this subject, from the following extract of Taliesin's poem on the mythological horses.*

Torrid, anuynudawl,
 Tuthiawl Dân iogawl—
 Ef iolen, o dduch lawr!
Tân Tân! hustin Gwawr!
 Uch awel uchel;
 Uch no pob nyfel!
 Mawr ei anyfel:
 Ni thrig yngofel,
 Na neithiawr Llyr.
 Llyr llwybyr y tebyr
 Dy far, ynghynebyr.
 Gwawr gwên wrth Uchyr—
 Wrth wawr, wrth wrys;
 Wrth pob hefelis;
 Wrth hefelis Nwython;
 Wrth pedyr afäon,
 Arddwyreaf i a varn Gwrys,
 Cadarn trydar—dwm ei gäs.

Let him burst forth, with rapid speed—The moving, the vehement fire: even he whom we adore, high above the earth!

* W Archaiol. p. 43.

“ THE FIRE, THE FIRE!” whispers Aurora.—“ He is high above the lofty gale. High above every sacred spirit! Vast is the bulk of his courser! He will not de-lay in the skirmish; nor at the wedding feast of Llyr” (the sea).

Thy path* in the sea is perceived—thy impulse in the mouths of rivers!

Aurora, smiling, repels the gloom!

At the dawn, at his ardent hour, at every meet season, at the meet season of his turnings, at the four stages of his course, will I extol him, who judges the ambitious—the mighty lord of the din †—dreadful is his wrath!

This, surely, implies the practice of fire-worship. The Bard, however, has not forgotten his Arkite lore. In the course of the poem, he celebrates the mythological steeds, which pertained to that superstition; and then recites a catalogue of his own transmigrations; amongst which we have the following—

Bâm llif, yn eirth.

Bâm ton, yn engweirth.

Bâm ysgof ysgeiniad Dilyw.

“ I have been a flood on the slope. I have been a wave on the extended shore. I have been a memorial of the spreading deluge.”

* It should seem, that the Bard imputes the flowing and ebbing of the tide to the sun's influence.

† The phrase Rhwyn Trydar, lord, or leader of the din, which Taliesin and Aneurin apply to the sun, with others of similar import, seem to denote, that the Druids welcomed his risings with frantic shouts of joy, accompanied with the vocal hynn, and instrumental music.

No. VI.

*A Poem of Taliesin, called, BUARTH BEIRDD, The Ox-pen of the Bards.

1.

Edd, ympeibli, oedd ympuyllled,
O feirdd Prydein, pryddest ofer,
Ymryoreu, ymryorsedd,
Digawn gofal i gofan gordd.
Wyf eissyg pren cyfyn an gerdd.
Buarth Beirdd, ar nis gwypo,
Pymthengmil drostaw,
Yn ei gymhwyaw.
Wyf cerddoliad: wyf ceiniad claer:
 Wyf dwr: wyf Dryw:
 Wyf saer: wyf syw:
Wyf sarph: wyf serch, ydd ymgestaf.
Nid wyf fardd syn, yn yryfreidiaw.
Pan gân ceinied, canu yngof.
Nyt ef wnafyt wy ryfedd uchon.
Handid a mi eu herbyniaw;
Mal arfoll dillad heb law;
Mal ymsawd yn llyn, heb naw.

Gliding with rapidity were my thoughts, over the vain poetic art of the Bards of Britain, † who labouring to make an excessive shew at the solemn meeting, with sufficient care hammer out a song. I require a staff, at unity with the Bardic lore. As for him who knows not the ox-pen ‡

* W. Archaiol. p. 27.

† Taliesin censures those Bards who were ambitious of displaying their talents, without having acquired an accurate knowledge of the mystic lore of the order. It appears from the sequel, that his satire is pointed chiefly against those poetical geniuses, who attended at the gates of the great.

‡ The insular eell or stall of the sacred ox, which represented the Arkite god, and was known only to the regular Bards or Druids.

of the Bards, may fifteen thousand overpower and afflict him at once!

I am a skilful composer: I am a clear singer: I am a tower:* I am a Druid: I am an architect: I am a prophet: I am a serpent: I am love: in the social banquet will I indulge.

A Bard am I, not doating upon superfluous trifles. When a master sings, his song will be close to the subject. He will not be searching for those remote wonders.

Shall I then, admit these, like men suing for garments, without a hand to receive them—like men toiling in the lake, without a ship! †

2.

Tyrfi aches eofn, yngradd

Uchel; yngwaed, morddwyd trefydded.

Craig, am waneg, wrth wawr, trefnad,

An clut ysgrut, esgar noddiaid;

Craig pen Perchen, pen anygnad.

Yna gwna meddut medddawt meddydd—

Wyf Cell: wyf dell: wyf darw Becrlled;

Wyf llogell cerdd: wyf lle ynydd;

Caraf y gorwydd, a gorail clyd,

A bardd a bryd, ni pryn yred.

Nyt ef caraf amryssoniaid:

A geibl celfydd, ny meuedd medd.

Madws myned i'r ymddiod,

A chelfyddeid, am gelfyddyd,

A chancwm, cystwm cywlad.

Bugeil bröoedd, porthoedd neirthiad,

* The mystagogue, as usual, blends his own personal character with the symbols of his god—the tower or pyramid, the serpent, &c.

† Several whimsical comparisons are added in the original poem, for the purpose of ridiculing the pretended Bards; but I have omitted them, as destitute of interest.

Mal ymdaith, heb drefet, i gad—

Wyf bardd neuodd, wyf kyv kadeir :

Digonaf i feirdd llafar llestair. —

Boldly* swells the stream to its high limit. Let the thigh be pierced in blood.—Let the rock beyond the billow, be set in order, at the dawn, displaying the countenance of HIM, who receives the exile into his sanctuary.—The rock of the Supreme Proprietor, the chief place of tranquillity.

Then let the giver of the mead feast cause to be proclaimed. †—“ I am the cell; I am the opening chasm; I “ am the bull Becr Lléd; ‡ I am the repository of the mys- “ tery; I am the place of reanimation. I love the tops of “ trees, with the points well connected,|| and the Bard “ who composes without meriting a repulse: but him I “ love not, who delights in contention. He who traduces “ the adept, shall not enjoy the mead. §—It is time to has-

* This passage describes the preparation for the solemn periodical rite, of removing the shrine out of the cell, in the Arkite island, which seems to have been surrounded only at high water. Here we may remark. 1. A ritual observation of the time of flood, alluding to the deluge. 2. A fanatical rite of piercing the thigh, so as to draw blood.—Thus, the idolatrous Israelites “ cried aloud, and cut themselves, after their manner, with knives and lancets, “ till the blood gushed out upon them.”—3. A ritual adorning of the sacred rock, which was, at that time, to display the countenance of the Arkite god. 4. This was done at the dawn, that the Helio-Arkite god might be coming forth from the cell, at the precise hour of the sun’s rising. 5. This rock was the chief place of tranquillity; for here the divinity was supposed to reside, excepting at the time of the solemn procession. 6. This patriarchal god, the Supreme Proprietor, was he who received his family, exiled from the world, into his ark or sanctuary.

† This proclamation is made in the name of the Arkite cell, and of the tauriform god.

‡ A foreign term: perhaps from בקר, which implies both an ox or bull, and also the dawn or morning; compounded with שלה, flame, fire, inchantment.

The bull of fire was an apt title for the Helio-Arkite god, as the bull was the symbol of the patriarch, and the sun was worshipped in the form of fire, or flame.

It will occur to the reader, that the other meanings of these terms, were strictly pertinent to the mysticism of the Druids, whose god came forth in the morning, and was esteemed the president of inchantors.

|| The mystagogue requires a song, not only perfectly consistent with the lore of the Bards, but also, noted in their mystical characters, or omen-sticks.

§ That is, “ Shall not be admitted to the mysteries, where the mead is “ ritually administered by the priests.

“ ten to the banquet, where the skilful ones are employed
 “ in their mysteries, with the hundred *knots—the custom
 “ of our countrymen.”

The shepherds of the plains, the supporters of gates,† are like persons marching to battle, without their clan.—
 I am the Bard of the hall, I am the stock that supports the chair : I shall succeed in impeding the progress of the loquacious Bards.

No. VII.

Conclusion of Taliesin's CAD GODDEU, or Battle of the Trees.‡

1.

Handid cynt, myr mawr,
 Erpan gicleu'r awr,
 A'n deilas blaen bedw,
 A'n datrith, a'n datedw.
 A'n maglas blaen derw,
 O warchan Maelderw ;
 Wherthinrawg. tu craig,
 Nêr, nid ystereig.

Existing of yore, in the great seas, from the time when

* By which, the symbolical sprigs above mentioned, were confined to their places, in the composition of the sacred hymn.

† Who seem, according to the vulgar phrase, to prop the gates of the great, where they attend as venal minstrels. As Druidism was not now established by law, the president had no weapon but his satire, wherewith to silence these poetasters.

‡ This piece contains much of the Helio-arkite lore : but it is so full of mystical allusions, which are become obscure, from the loss of monuments, that I hope to be pardoned, if I do not succeed in explaining the whole. It is here exhibited, in order to exercise the ingenuity of better mythologists.

See W. Archaiol. p. 50.

the shout* was heard, we † were put forth, decomposed and simplified, by the tops of the birch. ‡ The tops of the oak § connected us together, by the incantation of Maeld Derw; || whilst smiling at the side of the rock, Nêr ¶ remained in calm tranquillity.

2.

Nid o Fam a Thâd,
 Pan ýmddigonad,
 A'm crëu, am crëad;
 O naw rñith llafanad,
 O ffrwyth, O ffrwytheu,
 O ffrwyth Duw dechreu,
 O friallu, blodeu bre,
 O flawd gwydd a goddeu,
 O bridd, o briddred,

* Some passages in the modern Bards might countenance the idea, that this shout refers to the Creation; but I rather think, the mythologist alludes to the joy which took place at the opening of the ark, and the putting forth of its inhabitants.

† The original fraternity of Bards and Druids.

‡ As Bedwen, a birch, implies the may-pole, or Phallus; and, as the term is used by a celebrated Bard, D. ab Gwilym, in a very gross sense: I suspect Taliesin alludes to the powers of nature, in their simplest form.

§ The oak was sacred to the great god of the Druids, who is styled Buanawr, the quickener, before whom heaven and earth tremble—a dreadful foe, whose name in the table book is Dryssawr, the deity of the door. This must apply to the deified patriarch, who received his connected family into the ark, and his connected votaries into the Druidical sanctuary.

|| Beneficent of the oaks. There is a most dark and difficult poem, called the Incantation of Maelderw. See No. XVI.

¶ Nereus, the deluge, the abyss, which was now ceased. The name seems to be derived from the Hebrew נֶרַח, Ner, to run or flow, as water.—“Hence (says Mr. Parkhurst) the Greeks and Romans had their Nereus, which originally signified the great abyss, or the sea considered as communicating with it.” Thus Nereus is addressed in the Orphic hymn.

Possessor of the ocean's gloomy depth,
 Ground of the sea, earth's bourn and source of all,
 Shaking prolific Ceres' sacred seat,
 When, in the deep recesses of thy reign,
 The madding blasts are, by thy power, confin'd;
 But oh! the earthquake's dreadful force forefend!

Heb. Lex. V. נֶרַח.

Pan ym digoned ;
 O flawd danet,
 O ddwfr ton nawfed.

When my formation was accomplished,* not of mother and father was I produced ; but of nine elementary forms—of the fruit of fruits ; of the fruit of the primordial god ; of primroses, the blossoms of the mount ; of the flowers of trees and shrubs ; of earth, in its terrene state was I modelled ; of the flower of nettles, and the water of the ninth wave.

3.

A'm swynwysei Math,
 Cyn bûm diaered.
 Am swynwys i Wydion,
 Mawr nwr o Brython,
 O Eurwys, o Eurwn,
 O Euron, O Fedron,
 O bump pumhwnt Celfyddon,
 Athrawon, ail Math.
 Pan ymddygaid,
 A'm swynwys i Wledig,
 Pan fu led losgedig.
 A'm swynwys Sywydd
 Sywyddon, cyn byd,
 Pan fei gennyf fi vot,
 Pan fei faint byd hardd,
 Bardd Budd an gnawd :
 A'r wawd y tueddaf,
 A draetho tafawd.

* From henceforth, the mystagogue describes the formation, and details the history of the great president of the Druidical order, the priest, prophet, and vicegerent of the Helio-arkite god ; who, upon the principle of the metempsychosis, had preserved his existence and his identity through all ages, from the time when the ark was first constructed.

The fruits flowers, earth, and water here mentioned, are the same kind of ingredients which were used in the mystical purifications, with a view to form & regenerate the members of the Bardic order.

I was exorcised by Mâth,* before I became immortal. I was exorcised † by Gwydion, the great purifier of the Brython, of Eurwys, of Euron and Medron, of the multitude of scientific teachers, children of Math.

When the removal ‡ took place, I was exorcised by the sovereign, when he was half consumed. By the sage of sages was I exorcised in the primitive world, at which time I had a being: when the host of the world was in dignity, frequent was the benefit of the Bard.§ I am he who influence the song of praise, which the tongue recites.

4.

Gwariéis yn llychwr :
 Cysgais ym mhorffor.
 Neu bûm yn ysgor,
 Gan Ddylan, ail môr,
 Ynghylchedd, ymherfedd,
 Rhwng deulin teyrnedd,
 Yn deu wayw anchwant,
 O nef, pan doethant
 Yn Annwfn llifeiriant.
 Wrth frwydin, dybyddant
 Pedwar ugein kant,
 A gweint ar eu chwant.
 Nid ynt hyn, nid ynt iau
 No mi, yn eu bannau.

I sported in the gloom;|| I slept in purple; I truly was

* Mâth was a mighty operator with the magic wand, who, at the time of the deluge, set the elements at large; and Gwydion was the Hermes of the Britons.

Compare No. X. with Cadair Ceridwen.

† These repeated exorcisms, or purifications by mystical rites, seem to imply the initiation of the great pontifical character, every time he descended into a new body.

‡ The separation of the Noachidæ, or the dispersion from Eabel.

§ Or—"The Bard of Bûdd conversed much with men."

|| This passage clearly asserts, that the hierarch passed through the deluge, in the ship with Dylan, son of the sea, embraced in the centre, between the royal knees, when, like the rushing of hostile spears, the floods came forth, from heaven to the great deep. On the perforated surface, fourscore hundred * assemble, attendant on their will. They are neither older nor younger than myself in their divisions.

5.

Arial kannwr a geni.
 Pawb, o naw cant,
 Oedd gennyf inneu,
 Ynghleddyf brith gwaed.
 Bri am darwedd—O Ddofydd;
 A golo lle ydd oedd.
 O dof hyd l as baedd,
 Ef gwrith, ef dadwrith,
 Ef gwrith ieithoedd.
 Llachar ei enw, llawfer,
 Lluch llywei nifer,
 Ys gein ynt, yn ufel,
 O dof yn uchel.

*Tis the animated singer who chaunts. The complete number of nine hundred pertained to me, with my blood-stained sword.† To me was dignity allotted by Dovydd;‡ and where he was there was protection.

If I come to the green plain of the boar,§ he will com-which was regarded as a great lustration. And this achievement was performed in the sacred vessel of the patriarch.

* These 8000 were, perhaps, sacred fountains, which poured forth their waters to meet the descending rain, and complete the lustration of the globe.

† Stained with the blood of victims, which he had sacrificed.

‡ Domitor, God.

§ " Tacitus informs us, that the Estyi (a German tribe) worshipped the mother of the gods, and that the symbol which they used was a boar—the mother of the gods— was, in short, the ark of Noah, from which issued all the hero-gods of paganism. With regard to the boar—we find it introduced very conspicuously into many of those legendary traditions, which

Treiglais, cylchynais,
 Kysgeis cant ynys;
 Cant kaer a thrugys.
 Derwyddon doethur,
 Darogenwch i Arthur,
 Yssid y sydd gynt
 Neu'r mi, ergenhynt,
 A Christ y croccaw
 A dydd brawd rhag llaw,
 Ac am un adderyw,
 O ystyr dilyw?
 Eurem yn euryll,
 Mi hydwyf berthyll,
 Ac ydwyf drythyll,
 O ormes Fferyll.

Long and white are my fingers. It is long since I have been a herdsman.* I wandered in the earth, before I became a proficient in learning. I wandered, I went the circuit, I slept in a hundred islands; through a hundred Caers I toiled.

Ye intelligent Druids, declare to Arthur all that has been predicted of yore. Have they † not sung of me, and of Christ ‡ that was crucified, and of the day of future doom, and of one that has been endowed with the lore of the deluge.

With my precious golden device upon my piece of gold,

N N

* So Heilin, the Helio-arkite god, is styled Pasgadwr, the feeder, No. IV. The Bards had some tradition that their solar divinity, or his chief priest and representative, in ancient times, had been a herdsman or shepherd. The Greeks told the same tale of their Apollo.

See Apollodor. L. I. c. 9. and L. III. c. 10.

† That is, the diviners of former times.

‡ This sacred name is introduced as a cloak into many of the heathen songs of the Britons.

Lo, I am that splendid one, who sportively come from the invading host of the Feryll.*

—◆—

No. VIII.

Dialogue between Ugnach, the Son of Mydno, of Caer Sëon, and Taliesin, of Caer Deganwy.†

TALIESIN.

Marchawc, a girch y Dinas,
Ae con gwinion, ae cirn bras,
Nyth adwaen : ni rythwelas.

O knight, who approachest the city with white dogs ‡ and large horns, § I know thee not : to my eyes thou art not familiar.

UGNACH.

Marchawc, a circh ir Aber,
Yar March cadarn, cadfer,
Dabre genhiw : nim gwatter.

Thou knight, who repairest to the river's mouth, on a stout, warlike steed, || come with me ; I take no denial.

TALIESIN.

Mi nid aw ina in awr :

* Or Pheryll, Cabiri—Helio-arkites.

† W. Archaiol. p. 46.

The monks say that Ugnach, otherwise called Mygnach, the son of Mydnaw, the ship mover, was principal of the college of Caer Gybi, or Holyhead. But these legendaries often confound the votaries of Druidism, with the early saints of their own calendar ; and it may be inferred, from the following poem, which certainly is ancient, that Ugnach was a distinguished hierophant in Arkite mysteries. If his station was Holyhead, it must follow, that this islet was a Sëon or Sena of the British Bards.—See Sect. II.

‡ Cwn Annwn, or dogs of the deep, a mystical representation of the white-robed Druids. So Arawn, the Arkite, King of the Deep, had his pack of white dogs with red ears. See Sect. V.

§ Attributes of the tauriform god, whom this priest represented.

|| Taliesin's horse, named Melyngan, as we have already seen, was a sacred ship. See No. VII.

Gollew gweith y godriccawr,
Elhid bendith new a llawr!

At present, that is not my road—abstain from an injurious act, for the blessing of heaven and earth!

UGNACH.

Y gwr nim gwelas beunit,
Y tebic i gur deduit,
Ba hyd ei dy, a phan delit?

O thou who hast not often seen me—thou who resemblest one of the initiated, how long wilt thou absent thyself, and when wilt thou come?

TALIESIN.

Ban deuaw o Caer Sëon,
O imlat ac itewon,
I tau Caer Leu a Gwidion.

When I return from Caer Seon,* from contending with Jews, I will come to the city of Leu and Gwydion.†

UGNACH.

Dabrede genhiw i'r Dinas,
A thuit met ara phellas,
Ac eur coeth ar di wanas.

Come with me into the city, thou shalt have mead‡ which I have prepared, O thou with pure gold upon thy clasp.§

TALIESIN.

Mi nid aduen y gur hy,

N N 2

* Segontium, near Caernarvon, was called Caer Seiont, from the river Seiont (Amnis Sagarum), being probably the place where the Sëon, or Gallicensæ, landed from Mona. The Sëon here mentioned was an isolated sanctuary—Sëon Tewdor—or representative of the ark. See No. X.

† The former of these was the father of the Diluvian patriarch. See Cadair Ceridwen, inserted in the third Sect. The latter was the British Hermes, often mentioned.

‡ The cup of initiation.

§ A trinket, which was viewed as the insigne of an adept.—Aurdws.

A meteu tan y gveli—

Tec a chuec y dyuedi.

I know not the confident man, with his meads under his couch*—fair and courteous are thy words.

UGNACH.

Debre genhiw im tino,

A thuit gwin gorysgelho :

Ugnach yw vy heno, mab Mydno.

Come with me to my dwelling, and thou shalt have wine that briskly sparkles. Ugnach is my name, the son of Mydno.

TALIESIN.

Ugnach, bendith ith orset,

Athro rad ac enrydet!

Taliessin viw inheu, talaw iti dy gulet.

Ugnach, a blessing attend thy throne,† thou teacher of liberality and honour!—I am Taliesin, who will repay thy banquet.‡

UGNACH.

Taliessin, penhaw or gwir,

Beitat yng kert kyurgir,

Tric yma hyd dyv Merchir.

Taliesin, chief of men, thou victor in the contention of song, remain here till Wednesday.

TALIESIN.

Ugnach, moihav y alaw,

Ath ro rad y gulad penhaw :

Ny haetaw Kabit, ny thrigiaw.

Ugnach, the most affluent in riches, on thee may the supreme Ruler bestow his bounty! I merit not the booth—I may not stay.

* The Πασος, or cell of initiation.

† Or seat of presidency, which Ugnach filled, as chief of his order.

‡ By introduction into his Helio-arkite mysteries.

No. IX.

*A Song, apparently composed by Merddin the Caledonian, in form of a Dialogue between himself and Taliesin, in which the Bard deplores the Persecution of the Druids.

MYRDDIN.

Mor truan genhyf, mor truan
A dery am Kedwy a chavan!
Oed llachar kyvlavar cyvlavan.
Oed yscuid o Tryvrwyd, o truan!

How great my sorrow! How woful has been the treatment of Kedwy † and the boat! Unanimous was the assault, with gleaming swords. From the piercing conflict, one shield escaped.—Alas, how deplorable!

TALIESIN.

Oed Maelgwn a welwn, yn ymwan,
Y deulu, rac ter y uulu, ni thawan.

It was Maelgwn ‡ whom I saw, with piercing weapons before the master § of the fair herd, his household will not be silent.

MYRDDIN.

Rac deuwr, yn nentur, y tiran:
Rac Errith a Churrith, y ar welugan.
Meinwineu, yn ddiheu, a ddygan.
Moch gweler y niver gan Elgan:
Och, oe laith, mawr ateith y deuthan!

Before the two personages, they land in the celestial

* W. Archaiol. p. 48

† The Arkite goddess, whose appropriate emblem was the boat. In the days of Merddin, her votaries were exposed to a severe persecution.

‡ The Maglocunus of Gildas.

§ The tauriform god, or his chief priest.

circle*—before the passing form, and the fixed form † over the pale white boundary.

The grey stones ‡ they actually remove. Soon is Elgan § and his retinue discovered—for his slaughter, alas, how great the vengeance that ensued!

TALIESIN.

Rys undant, oedd rychuant, y tarian.

Hyd attad y daeth rhad cyflawn.

Llas Cyndur, tra messur, y cwynan.

Llas haelon o ddynon, tra fuan

Trywyr nod, mawr eu clod, gan Elgan.

Thou that rushest forth, with one tooth (thou boar) thy shield has overwhelmed. To thee, complete liberality had been extended—Excessively is the slaughter of Cyndur deplored—Slain are three men, || who were liberal in their lives; even three eminent men, highly esteemed by Elgan.

MYRDDIN.

Trwy a thrwi, vug a rug, y daethan,

Traw a thraw, undoeth Bran a Melgan.

Llad Dyuel, oe diwed cyflafan,

Ab Erbin, ae werin, a wnaethan.

Through and through, wide and pointed, they came, advancing and surrounding the only wise Brân (raven), the son of Elgan. Dywal, the son of Erbin, with his retinue, did they slaughter in their last assault.

TALIESIN.

Llu Maelgwn, bu yscwn y daethan :

* The circular temple, representing the zodiac, &c. It is also called Cylch balch Newwy, the magnificent celestial circle, Cylch byd, the mundane circle, &c.

† Some symbols of the moon and sun.

‡ The persecutors of the Druids, it seems, amongst other acts of hostility, broke to pieces, or defaced, the sacred circles. This was deemed, by the votaries of the old superstition, a most heinous outrage. See No. XII.

§ The sacred ox, or his chief priest.

|| These seem to have been three attendant priests.

Aerwyr cad, trybelidiad, gwaedlan,
 Neu gwaith Arysberydd,
 Pan fydd, y deunydd,
 O hyd y wychydd,
 Y darparan.

The host of Maelgwn, exulting, advanced: and severely did the embattled warriors pierce in the bloody inclosure. Even the battle of Arysberydd,* which is at hand, with the utmost energy will they prepare.

MYRDDIN.

Lliaws peleidrad, gwaedlad gwaedlan.
 Lliaws aerwyr bryw breuawl Sidan.
 Lliaws ban briwher:
 Lliaws ban foher,
 Lliaws eu hymchwel,
 Yn eu hymwan.

A host of flying darts, in the bloody plain, prepare the banquet of gore. A host of warriors, destroy the tottering Sidan.† Many a festive horn is broken: many a horn-bearer is put to flight, whilst the host is forcing them back to promiscuous slaughter.

TALIESIN.

Seith meib Eliffer,
 Seith gwyr, ban broffer,
 Saith gwaew ni ochel,
 Yn eu seithran.

The seven sons of Eliffer,‡ seven heroes, when put to the test, shun not the seven spears, in their seven stations.

* Or Arderydd, in which the Northern establishment of the Druids was utterly ruined. See Sect. V. Merddin makes Taliesin prophesy of this calamitous event.

† The same, I suppose, as Sidi or Sidin, the Helio-arkite temple. See Sect. IV. This stanza seems to describe the fanatical battle of Arderydd.

‡ Surnamed Gosgorddwawr, with the great retinue. He was brother of Ceidiaw, Gwenddolen's father.

MYRDDIN.

Seith tan ufelin,
 Seith cad cyferbin,
 Seithfed Cynfelin,
 Y pob cinhvan.

Seven blazing fires will counteract seven battles: the seventh is Cynvelyn,* in the front of every mount.

TALIESIN.

Seith gwaew gowanon
 Seith loneid afon,
 O gwaed Cinreinon,
 Y dylanwan.

Seven piercing spears shall fill seven rivers; with the blood of leading heroes shall they fill them.

MYRDDIN.

Seith ugein haelon
 A aethan yg wllou;
 Ynghoed Celiddon,
 Y darfuan.

Canys mi Myrtin,
 Gwedi Taliesin,
 Bythawd cyffredin

Fy darogan.

Seven score liberal heroes are now become wandering spirits: in the forest of Caledonia,† they met their fate.

Since I, Merddin, am next after Taliesin, let my prophecy be received, in common with his.

* Lord Belin, Dominus Sol. The name has been conferred upon some of his favourite priests and votaries. In this passage, the mystagogue seems to predict the re-establishment of his cause at some future period.

† Into which the remains of the Druid host retired for safety.

No. X.

A Song of Taliesin, called MARWNAD AEDDON O VÔN, the Elegy of Aeddon of Mona.†*

1.

Echrys ynys
 Gwawd Hu, ynys
 Gwrys Gobrettor ;
 Mon, mad gogeu,
 Gwrhyd erfei,
 Menei ei dór.
 Lleweis wirawd
 Gwin a bragawd,
 Gan frawd esgor.
 Tëym wofrwy,
 Diwedd pob rhwy,
 Rhwyf rhewintor.
 Tristlawn ddëon,
 Yr Arch Aeddon,
 Can rychïor,
 Nid fu, nid fi,
 Ynghemelrhi,
 Ei gyfeissor.
 Pan ddoeth Aeddon,
 O wlad Wydion,
 Sëon tewdor ;
 Gwenwyn pur ddoeth,

* Lord of the Din—a title of the Helio-arkite god, who is styled Cadarn Trydar, the mighty one of the Din. No. V. and Rhwyf Trydar, leader of the Din. Gododin. He seems to have derived these names from the fanatical hymns and frantic shouts of his votaries, at the hour of his rising. The title is here transferred to his priest.

† See W. Archaiol. p. 70.

Pedair Peunoeth,
 Meinoeth tymhor :
 Cwyddynt gytoed ;
 Ni bu clyd coed,
 Gwynt yn gorór.
 Math ag Eunydd,
 Hudwydd gelfydd,
 Rydd elfinor.
 Ym myw Gwydion
 Ac Amaethon,
 Atoedd cynghor,
 Twll tal y rodawg,
 Ffyryf ffodiawg,
 Ffyrf diachor :
 Cadarn gyngres
 Ei faranres,
 Ni bu warth for.
 Cadarn gyfedd,
 Ymhob Gorsedd,
 Gwnelid ei fodd.
 Cu cynaethwy !
 Hyd tra fyw fwy, Crybwyllettor.

Disturbed is the island of the praise of HU, the island of the severe remunerator; even Mona, of the generous bowls, which animate vigour—the island whose barrier is the Menai.

There I enjoyed the beverage* of wine and sweet liquor with a brother, who is now departed. The universal tyrant puts an end to every energy—the leader of destruction.

Deplorable is the fate of the ark † of Aeddon, since it is

* Which was administered to the attendants at the sacred festival.

† The ark of the god, which was under the protection of his priest.

perceived, that there neither has been, nor will there be his equal, in the hour of perturbation.

When Aeddon came from the land of Gwydion, into Sëon of the strong door,* a pure poison diffused itself for four successive nights, whilst the season was as yet serene. His contemporaries fell. The woods afforded them no shelter, when the winds arose in their skirts. Then Mâth and Eunydd, masters of the magic wand, set the elements at large: but in the living Gwydion and Amaethon, there was a resource of counsel, to impress the front of his shield with a prevalent form, a form irresistible. Thus the mighty combination of his chosen rank was not overwhelmed by the sea: and in every seat of presidency, the will of his

* The ark; and hence the insulated fanes, sacred to Arkite mysteries. Gwydion was Hermes. His land may have been the old world, which was overwhelmed by the deluge; as it was his traditional office to conduct the dead into a region beneath the abyss.

In this passage, we have much Arkite mythology.

1. The patriarch came from the land of Hermes, or the old world.
2. He entered the inclosure of Sëon, or of the nine sacred damsels, which was guarded by a strong door, or barrier. This inclosure was the ark.
3. When he was shut up in this sanctuary, the great supreme (See No. III.) sent forth a poisonous vapour, to destroy the wicked world. To this bane, the Bards often allude. See Cadair Ceridwen, Marwnad Dylan, &c. But the messenger of death entered not the inclosure of Sëon. In the same strain of fable, Maelgwn is said to have retired into a church, to avoid the contagion of the yellow pestilence: here he would have been safe, had he not seen the demon of destruction through a small hole in the door: but the inclosure of Sëon was better secured.
4. By this pestilential vapour, which filled the whole atmosphere, the patriarch's wicked contemporaries were destroyed. But the earth was still polluted.
5. Then the great magicians, with their magic wands, set free the purifying elements: one of the effects of which, as described in the Triads, was the dreadful tempest of fire, which split the earth to the great deep, and consumed the greatest part of all that lived. W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 59. Upon this, the waters of Llyn Llion, or the abyss, burst forth.
6. These powerful agents would have destroyed the patriarch and his family in Caer Sëon, had not Hermes counselled him to impress a mystical form, or to strike a peculiar signal upon his shield. This, I suppose, had the same effect as the horrid din, with which the heathens pretended to save the moon, at the hour of her eclipse.
7. This device, together with the integrity of the just ones, preserved them from being overwhelmed by the deluge.
8. Hence, an imitation of these adventures became a sacred institution, which was duly observed in the mysteries, and conducted by the presiding priest.

mighty representative in the feast will be obeyed. The dear leader of the course—whilst my life continues, he shall be commemorated.

2.

Echrys ynys
 Gwawd Hu, ynys
 Gwrys gochymma.
 Y rhag Buddwas,
 Cymry ddinas
 Aros ara ;
 Draganawl ben,
 Priodawr, perchen
 Ym Mretonia.
 Difa gwledig,
 Or bendefig,
 Ae tu terra !
 Pedeir morwyn,
 Wedy eu cwyn,
 Dygnawd eu tra.
 Erddygnawd wîr,
 Ar for, heb dir,
 Hir eu trefra :
 Oi wironyn,
 Na ddigonyn
 Dim gofetra.
 Ceryddus wyf,
 Na chrybwyllwyf
 A'm rywnel da.
 I lwrw Llywy
 Pwy gwa harddwy,
 Pwy attrefna !
 I lwrw Aeddon,
 Pwy gynneil Mon
 Mwyn gywala ?

Disturbed is the island of the praise of HU, the island of the severe inspector. Before Buddwas,* may the community of the Cymry remain in tranquillity; he being the dragon chief, the proprietor, the rightful claimant in Britannia!

What shall consume a ruler† of the illustrious circle—is it a portion of earth? The four damsels‡ having ended their lamentation, have performed their last office; but the just ones toiled: on the sea which had no land, long did they dwell: of their integrity it was, that they did not endure the extremity of distress.

Yet still am I oppressed with sorrow, unless I commemorate my benefactor. In behalf of Llywy, who will now exercise restraint, who shall restore order! In behalf of Aeddon, who shall support Mona's benign associates!

No. XI.

An ancient Poem, called MARWNAD UTHYR PENDRAGON, the Elegy of Uther Pendragon.§

To the readers of Geoffrey of Monmouth, and his numberless copyists, the name of Uther Pendragon, the old

* A title of Hu, who was venerated in the symbol of a huge serpent, and acknowledged as the supreme lord of Britain, where his chief priest governed as his vicegerent. See No. XI.

† The priest, who was considered as still living, Orbe alio, though his corporeal parts had been dissolved.

‡ Gallicenæ, Gwyllion, or Sion. Those devoted priestesses, whose office it was, in the mysteries, to lament the supposed death of their god, as the Jewish women wept for Tammuz.

Here the Bard, as usual, digresses into his Arkite mythology.—The just ones, or Arkites, had been afflicted and tossed about upon the face of the deluge; but their integrity brought them to a safe harbour. The natural inference was, that this good priest, their votary, had also escaped from trouble. Notwithstanding this implied hope, the Bard is grieved for the departure of his benefactor, whose loss will be long felt by the fraternity of Mona.

§ The name implies wonderful supreme leader, or wonderful chief dragon.

King of the Britons, must be perfectly familiar. In this poem, however, he appears in the character of a heathen divinity, and his history is clearly referable to that of the deified patriarch.

In the former part of the piece, this divinity is personified by one of his priests, who recites part of the attributes and history of the pageant god: in the latter part, he is addressed by a sacrificing priest, with a prayer for the prosperity of Britain. The whole seems to have been taken from a mystical formulary.

1.

Neu fi liossawg yn trydar ;
 Ni pheidwn, rhwng deu lu, heb wyar.
 Neu fi a elwir Gorlassar.
 Fy ngwregys bu envys im hesgar.
 Neu fi tywyssawg, yn nhywyll,
 A'm rithwy am dwy pen kawell.
 Neu fi, ail Cawyl, yn arddu,
 Ni pheidsiwn heb wyar rhwng deulu.
 Neu fi, a amug fy achlessur,
 Yn divant, a charant, casnur.
 Neu'r orddyfneis i waed am wythur,
 Cleddyfal, hydyr, rhag meibion Cawr Nur!
 Neu fi a rannwys fy echlessur,
 Nawfetrn, yngwryd Arthur!
 Neu fi a dorreis cant Caer :
 Neu fi a leddais cant maer :
 Neu fi a roddeis cant llen :
 Neu fi a leddais cant pen :
 Neu fi a roddeis, i Henpen,

The reader will recollect, that the titles of the Helio-arkite god have often been conferred upon his priests, and upon those princes who were favourites with the Druids and Bards.

See W. Archaiol. p. 72.

Cleddyfawr, gorfawr gynghallen.
 Neu fi a oreu terenhydd—
 Haeardor, edeithor pen mynydd.
 Ym gwedduit im gofid,
 Hydyr oedd gyhir;
 Nid oedd fyd na bei fy Eissillydd.
 Mydwyf Bardd moladwy-anghywreint
 Poet y gan vrein, ac eryr, ac wytheint—
 Afagddu ae deubu ei gymaint,
 Pan ymbyrth pedrywyr rhwng dwy geint.
 Dringaw i nef oedd fy chwant,
 Rhag eryr, rhag ofn amheirant.
 Wyf Bardd, ag wyf telynawr,
 Wyf Pibydd, ag wyf Crythawr,
 Seith ugein cerddawr,
 Dy gorfawr gyngallen.

Behold me, who am powerful in the tumultuous din; who would not pause between two hosts, without blood. Am I not called Gorlassar,* the atherial? My belt has been a rainbow, enveloping my foe. Am not I a protecting prince in darkness, to him who presents my form at both ends of

* There are many things worthy of remark in the character of this British Pantheos, as delineated by his priest and representative.

He is lord of the din, which, as we have seen, is a description of the Helio-arkite god: he is the god of war—the ætherial god—and the deity to whom the rainbow pertains; that is, the deified Noah. See Cadair Ceridwen.

He is a protector in darkness—a husbandman, like the Diluvian patriarch—a protector of the ark, and Arkite temples, like the sovereign ON. See No. IV.

He is the vanquisher of the Diluvian giants, the inspirer of heroism, and the president of mystic lore.

He gave the invincible sword to Henben (the ancient chief, some idolized monarch of early ages), and accomplished the purification of Haearddor, Σιδηροδωρον, the ark, the same as Seon Tewdor, and Ynys Pybyrdor.

His state of affliction (during the deluge) was symbolized by an ox submitting to the yoke. He was the father of all mankind; and, as the great demon-god of the Bards, and their original instructor, he was skilled in all the mysteries of the order—being a Bard, a musician, and an enchanter. At the same time, he disliked the symbol of the eagle, which may have offended the Druids, when he displayed his wings on the Roman standard.

the hive? Am not I a plower, like Kawyl? Between two hosts I would not pause, without blood. Have not I protected my sanctuary, and, with the aid of my friends, caused the wrathful ones to vanish? Have not I shed the blood of the indignant, in bold warfare against the sons of the giant Núr? Have not I imparted, of my guardian power, a ninth portion, in the prowess of Arthur? Have not I destroyed a hundred forts? Have not I slain a hundred governors? Have not I given a hundred veils? Have not I slaughtered a hundred chieftains?

Did not I give to Henpen, the tremendous sword of the enchanter? Did not I perform the rites of purification, when Haeardor moved with toil to the top of the hill?

I was subjected to the yoke for my affliction; but commensurate was my confidence: the world had no existence, were it not for my progeny.

I am the Bard—as for the unskilful encomiast, may his lot be amongst ravens, and eagles, and birds of wrath! May utter darkness overwhelm him, when he supports the square band of men, between two fields!

It was my will to ascend into heaven from the eagle, to avoid the homage of the unskilful. I am a Bard: I am a master of the harp, the pipe, and the crooth. Of seven score musicians, I am the mighty enchanter.

2.

Bu calch fri friniad,
 Hu, esgyll edeniad,
 Dy fab, dy Feirddnad,
 Dy Veir, Dewn dad—
 - - - - Fy nhafawd,
 I draethu marwnad,
 Handid o meinad
 Gwrthgloddiaid byd.

It is a perfect vaticination—There will be dwelling in the desert, and the Cymry of four dialects will change their speech—Then will come the spotted cow,* which shall procure a blessing. On the serene day will she bellow; on the eve of May shall she be boiled, and on the spot where her boiling is completed, shall her consumer rest in peace.

3.

Cathl gwae canhator,
 Cylch Prydain, amgor.
 Dedeuant, un gyngor,
 I wrthod gwarthmor.
 Boet gwir Venuit,
 Dragwynawl byd,
 Dolwys dolhwy Kÿd,
 Dol aethwy cithyd,
 Cynran llawn yt,
 Cysarth cynud,
 Heb eppa, heb henvonva,
 Heb ovur byd,
 Byd a fydd diffaith,
 Diraid cogeu, tynghettor
 Hoywedd trwy groywedd.

Let the song of woe be chaunted,† round the sacred

* Emblem of the ark—bellowing, before the deluge. for its select company—then boiled, or tossed about by the flood, and finally consumed on the spot where the patriarch landed, and found rest.

† This division of the poem presents a tradition of Nimrod's rebellion, or of a subsequent dereliction of some principles, which the Druids deemed sacred. His customary honours had been withholden from the patriarch, who is here described as ruler of the sea, in allusion to his riding upon the deluge. He has the name of Menwyd, which, if it be British, seems to imply the blessed—he is the dragon chief of the world, or the universal patriarch and king, venerated under the symbol of a dragon—he is the fabricator of Kyd, or the ark, in which he traversed the waters of the abyss.

This ark was stored with corn: hence Ceres, her appropriate genius, as well as the British Ceridwen, was the goddess of corn; and, like the car of Ceres, the British ark was borne aloft by serpents, those favourite symbols of Helio-arkite idolatry.

The adversaries of Menwyd wished to remove or destroy three things—first, border of Britain! Men will assemble, with one purpose, to resist Gwarthmor (him who presided over the sea)—Let truth be ascribed to Menwyd, the dragon chief of the world, who formed the curvatures of Kýd, which passed the dale of grievous water, having the fore part stored with corn, and mounted aloft with the connected serpents.

Without the ape, without the stall of the cow, without the mundane rampart, the world will become desolate, not requiring the cuckoos to convene the appointed dance over the green.

4.

Gwyr bychain bron otwyllyd,
 Torwennawl tuth iolydd,
 Hwedydd ar fedydd.
 Ni wan cyllellawr
 Meiwyr cleddyfawr.
 Nid oedd uddu y puchyssyn :
 Maw angerddawl trefddyn,
 Ac i wyr caredd creuddyn,
 Cymry, Eingyl, Gwyddyl, Prydyn.
 Cymry cyfred ag asgen,
 Dygedawr gwyddfeirch ar llyn.
 Gogledd a wenwynyd o Hermyn, the ape. This animal the Egyptians held sacred to the god Apis (Bryant's Analysis, V. I. p. 335), who was Noah (Ib. V. II. p. 268), worshipped under the form of a bull. Ib. p. 418.

As the ape was not a native of Britain, or of any other Northern climate, it may be inferred, that the Druidism of this Bard was tinctured with the superstition of some Southern people.

The second object of persecution was the stall of the cow, or the cell which contained the symbol of the Arkite goddess: and the third was the mundane rampart, or circular temple, representing the great belt, which surrounds the world.

The fanatical Bard deems the ape, the stall of the cow, and the consecrated circle, of such importance, that he fancies the world would become desolate when they were destroyed; and in vain should the cuckoo proclaim the approach of the great festival in the beginning of May, with its solemn procession, and sacred dance. This dance is mentioned No. II. IV. and XIV.

O echlur, caslur, caslun,
 O echen Addaf henyn,
 Dygedawr trydw i gychwyn,
 Branes o gosgordd gwyrein
 Merydd miled Seithin.
 Ar for angor a'r Cristin.
 Uch o for, uch o fynydd,
 Uch o for ynial, erbyn
 Coed, maes, tyno a bryn.
 Yd vi pob arawd
 Heb erglywaw nebawd,
 Crynhawg o bob mehyn.
 Yd fi brithred,
 Alliaws gynnired,
 A gofud am wehyn.
 Yd fi dialeu,
 Trwy hoyw gredeu,
 Goddi Dduw Urddin.

Men of little mind are partly misled by the worshipper of the white-bellied wanderer, the hunter of baptism.* The knife-bearer † shall not pierce the swordsmen of May. ‡ They have not obtained their wishes—neither the ardently ambitious proprietor, nor the violent, blood-stained men, whether Cymry, Angles, Gwyddelians, or North Britons.

The Cymry, flying in equal pace with ruin, are launching their wooden steeds (ships) upon the water. The North has been poisoned by depredatory rovers, of pale and disgusting hue, and hateful form, of the race of Adam § the Ancient, whom the flight of ravens has thrice compelled to

* In this obscure passage, the Bard complains of the corruptors and persecutors of his religion.

† The Saxon; alluding to the affair at Stonehenge.

‡ The Britons; who carried arms in their mystical processions. See No. XIV.

§ A scoff at Scripture history. The Bards, forsooth, were not children of the fallen Adam, but of the regenerate Noah.

change their abode, and leave the exalted society of Seithin* haunTERS of the watery plain.

At sea, there is an anchor with the Cristin.† There is a cry from the sea, a cry from the mountain. From the tumultuous sea, the cry strikes the wood, the plain, the dale, and the hill.

There will be discordant speeches, to which none can attend, and inquiries from every quarter.

There will be a tumultuous flight, and abundant distress. There will be retaliation for wavering faith, purposed by the glorious god.

5.

Pell amser, cyn dydd brawd,
 Y daw diwarnawd,
 A dwyreïn darlleawd
 Terwyn tirion tir Iwerddon.
 I Brydain, yna, y daw dadwyrein,
 Brython o fonedd Rhufeïn.
 Am bi barnodydd, o anghynres, dieu.
 Dysgogan Sywedyddion,
 Yngwlad y colledigion:
 Dysgogan Derwyddon,
 Tra môr, tra Brython,
 Haf ni bydd hinon,
 Bythawd breu breyron:
 Ai deubydd ogwanfred,
 Tra merin Tad Cêd.
 Mil ym brawd Brydain Urddin
 Ac yam gyffwn kyffin.
 Na chwyaf yngoglud gwern
 Gwerin gwaelodwedd Uffern;

* The patriarch—the Saturn of the Druids. See Sect. III.

† Professor of Christianity.

Ergrynaf cylestrig caen,
Gan wledig gwlad anorphen.

Long before the day of doom,* shall the time arrive, when the East shall survey the fair borders of Erin's land.† Then shall Britain have a re-exaltation—Britons shall be delivered from the race of Rome; and I shall have judges, not banding together, but void of guile.

The diviners vaticinate in the land of those who have been lost.‡—Druids§ from beyond the sea—beyond the Northern Britons, predict a summer, in which the rain shall not cease. Then shall the great ones be broken—they shall have their feeble wanderings beyond the effusion of the father of Kêd.||—The animal (Kêd) shall award to me the dignified Britain,¶ with its united boundaries.

And, lest I sink, adhesive to the quagmire of that multitude, which peoples the depths of hell, I will tremble before the covering stone, with the sovereign of boundless dominion.

* The Druids had some idea of a day of doom: at least, the phrase often occurs in the most heathenish paragraphs of the ancient poems. Something of the same kind has been remarked in the tales of the Edda.

† As this is a pretended prophecy of the Ogdoad, we may suppose that the Bard alludes to certain events, which had occurred previous to his own age; and which he affected to regard as the accomplishment of the prophecy.

‡ Diviners of the primitive world, which had been overwhelmed by the deluge. He probably means the Ogdoad, who had prophesied before the flood.

§ These fanatics had established a seminary in the North, out of the reach of Roman arms. See Sect. V

|| The Diluvian patriarch, who produced Kêd, the sacred ship. The Bard consigns his enemies to the bottom of the abyss.

¶ Or, re-establish the arch Druid, as supreme ruler of Britain. See No. I.

 Such was the British hell. The Bards tell us, it abounded with frost and snow, and was infested by a variety of noxious and loathsome animals.

No. XIII.

The Conclusion of Taliesin's ANGAR CYVYNDAWD.*

Ath gyfarchaf, fargad fardd.
 Gwr yth gynnydd esgyrn niwl,
 Cwddynt deu raiadr gwynt!
 Traethator fyngofeg,
 Yn Efrai, yn Efrog.
 Eilgweith ym rhithad:
 Bûm glas gleisiad:
 Bûm ci: bum hydd:
 Bum Iwrch ym mynydd:
 Bum cyff: bum rhaw:
 Bum bwyall yn llaw:
 Bum ebill yngefel,
 Blwyddyn a hanner:
 Bum ceiliawg brithwyn
 Ar ieir, yn Eidin:
 Bum Amws ar Re:
 Bum tarw toste:
 Bum bwch melynawr,
 Mal y maethawr:
 Bum gronyn erkennis,
 Ef tyfwys ym mryn;
 A mettawr am dottawr
 Yn sawell, ym gyrrawr
 Ymrygiaw o law,
 With fy nghoddeidiaw.

* A translation of the former part, relative to the parentage and character of the British Apollo, is inserted in the Celt. Res. p. 553.

The extract which follows relates to the priest of that god, and recites the various characters he had sustained in his progress through the circle of transmigration, or the stages of initiation.

See W. Archaiol. p. 36.

A'm harfolles iar
 Grafrudd, grîb escar.
 Gorffwysseis naw nos,
 Yn ei chroth, yn was.
 Bum Aedd, aeduedig :
 Bum llad, rhag gwledig :
 Bum marw : bum byw ;
 Keing ydd ym eiddaw,
 Bum i arweddawd,
 Y rhagddaw bum tlawd.
 A'm eil cynghores gres
 Grafrudd : am rhoddes,
 Odid traethator
 Mawr molhator.

Mi wyf Taliesin ;
 Ryphrydaf iawn llin,
 Parahawd hyd ffin,
 Ynghynelw Elphin.

To thee, O Bard of the borders, I address myself ;
 Mayest thou be advanced by him, whose bones were formed of mist, in the place where two cataracts of wind mingle together.

My lore has been declared in Hebrew, in Hebraic*—a second time was I formed. I have been a blue salmon : I have been a dog : I have been a stag : I have been a roebuck on the mountain : I have been a stock of a tree : I have been a spade : I have been an axe in the hand : I have been a pin in a forceps, for a year and a half : I have been a cock, variegated with white, upon hens, in Eidin : I have been a stallion upon a mare : I have been a buck of a yellow hue, in the act of feeding : I have been a grain † of the Arkites,

* His lore, therefore, was not regarded as peculiar to the Druids of Britain.

† See the story called Hanes Taliesin, in the third Section of the preceding Essay.

which vegetated on a hill; and then the reaper placed me in a smoky recess, that I might be compelled freely to yield my corn, when subjected to tribulation. I was received by a hen,* with red fangs and a divided crest. I remained nine nights an infant in her womb. I have been Aedd,† returning to my former state. I have been an offering before the sovereign. I have died; I have revived; and, conspicuous with my ivy branch,‡ I have been a leader, and by my bounty I became poor.

Again was I instructed by the cherisher with red fangs. Of what she gave me, scarcely can I utter the great praise that is due. I am now Taliesin—I will compose a just string, which shall remain to the end of time, as a model to Elphin.

—◆—

No. XIV.

A Poem, from the ancient MS. of Theophilus Jones, Esq. § It immediately follows Aneurin's Gododin, and is probably the Work of the same Author. || The Title, which seems to have consisted of two short Words, is wholly obliterated.

1.

Aryf angkynnull,
Angkyman dull,
Twryf en agwed.

* This mystical Hen, as the reader has seen, was the Arkite goddess.

† This seems to have been a title of the Diluvian patriarch, or Helio-arkite god, with whom his priest claimed a mystical union.

‡ The heathen Britons crowned themselves with ivy branches, when they celebrated the mysteries of Bacchus.

§ See an imperfect copy, W. Archaiol. p. 21.

|| The manifest intention of this poem, is to recommend to the Britons the use of arms. The Bard first of all recites the solemn custom of carrying them in the celebration of Bacchic rites: and then touches upon the calamitous fate of those British nobles, who laid aside their arms in their conference with Hengist.

And now a wave* bursts forth from the central region : the afflicter of the world refused, from the inhabitants of the land, and for the benefit of his train, four multitudes,† and four that were resigned, to the chace of the universal hunter.

The shield is split into lath;‡ but his blade descends on the head of one selected§ from the quadrangle—of that man who, even now, had been pouring mead from the blue horns, the great ruler, enveloped in purple, the supporter of the army.

The dignified Tudwylch had attended the woful assembly, in which blood was mixed with wine—in which they who freely regaled with mead, drank of the cup of slaughter, amidst their excess; and the inclosure that had been watted, for the preservation of law, became full of confusion.

The princely Cynan had journeyed from Mona, to support the privilege of the higher order: Tudwylch, the batterer, had made breaches in the bastions of forts: hence the destruction they found, in their banquet with Mynyddawg. ||

For the men of Catraeth, my supporters, I have borne a year¶ of sorrow. Their steel blades—their mead—their

P P 2

* This wave was Hengist and his Saxons. The imagination of the Bards was so wholly engrossed by their Diluvian lore, that they borrowed most of their imagery from it.

† The inhabitants of those districts which Vortigern had assigned to Hengist.

‡ When Hengist advised, that shields should be excluded from the place of conference, as useless and inconvenient in a friendly assembly, he seems to have hewn his own shield into splinters, by way of enforcing his argument. Aneurin, in the Gododin, speaks of his leaving at a distance the shield that was split into lath.

§ Tudwylch, whom Hengist selected for his own victim, and for that purpose placed next to him at the feast. The fate of this prince is deplored in the songs of the Gododin.

|| The mountain chief—Vortigern the Venedotian, as in the Gododin.

¶ Hence it appears, that this poem was composed a year after the massacre of the nobles at Stonehenge, or about A. D. 473. Aneurin had witnessed the horrid scene, and the groans of the dying still sounded in his ears.

violence—their assortment in pairs!—Those who carry no weapons, have their form lacerated—Do I not still hear the tumult!

No. XV.

Amongst the most curious productions of the ancient British muse, we may class those little poems, which are called Gwarchanau, charms, or talismans; or else Gorchanau, incantations. In addition to the general lore of Druidism, these pieces bring forward certain mystical amulets, which were delivered to the patriotic warriors, as infallible pledges of the protection of the gods; and which were evidently remains of the renowned magic of the Britons. The language of these compositions is of difficult construction, and the subject, as might be expected, mysterious and obscure. Nevertheless, as an exhibition of them may be deemed essential in the exposure of our national superstition, I shall present the reader with the originals, from the oldest known MS. together with a close translation, and a few explanatory notes.*

GWARCHAN ADEBON.

Ex vetusto codice membranaceo Theoph. Jones, Armig.

Ny phell gwyd aval o avall:
 Ny chynnyd dyual a dyvall.
 Ny byd elhovyn noeth en ysgall,
 Pawb, pan ry dyngir, yt ball.

* There are three of these pieces preserved; but I shall reserve the talisman of Cunobeline, till I offer some remarks upon the old British coins.

A garwn y ef carei anreithgar![†]
 Ny byd marw dwyweith,
 Nyt amsud y vud e areith!
 Ny cheri gyfofni gyvyeith.
 Emis emwythwas amwyn;
 Am swrn, am gorn kuhelyn,
 En adef tangdef, collit.
 Adef led, buost lew en dyd mit.
 Kudvyt keissyessyt keissyadon.
 Mein uchel, medel e alon,
 Dyven ar warchan Adebbon.

THE TALISMAN OF ADEBON.*

The apple will not fall far distant from the tree. The sedulous cannot prosper in company with the remiss. All those who are not intrepid, when exposed naked amongst thistles, will fail when adjured.

Should I love him who could become the friend of the spoiler! The man who cannot die twice, will govern his speech, as if he were dumb. It was not thy disposition to put thy countrymen in fear. The fierce youth treasured up the gem of protection; yet for a trifle, for the horn of the stranger, in disclosing the word of peace, he was lost. Indirect was thy answer, and thou hast been brave in the day of battle. Concealed was that information which the inquirer sought—the dweller amongst the high stones,† the reaper of his foes, smiled upon the talisman of Adebbon.

* In this little poem, the mystagogue discriminates between those probationers who duly preserved the secrets with which they were entrusted, and those who were tempted by any consideration whatever to divulge them. To the latter, it seems, the protecting talisman would be of no avail.

† In the original—high stones, the reaper of his foes. This is an elliptical phrase, implying the god who inhabited the temple, constructed of high stones.

No. XVI.

GWARCHAN MAELDERW. Ex eodem.

That the reader may form some idea of the nature of this very obscure and mysterious poem, he must suppose that some great public calamity had recently befallen the Britons—the same, apparently, which Aneurin deploras in his Gododin. Upon this occasion, the Archimagus, in order to guard in future against such fatal accidents, devises a magical flag for the leader of the native forces. He is now in the mystic cell, giving direction to his attendants for the completion of this great work, and intermixing some hints for the conduct of a good general, with allusions to the history of his times.

I.

Doleu deu ebyr am gaer,
 Ymduhun am galch, am glaer—
 Gwibde a doer adwy aer.
 Clodryd keissidyd kysgut:
 Brithwe arwe arwrut,
 Ruthyr anoothwe, a uebir:
 Adwy a dodet ny debit.
 Odef ynyas dof y wryt:
 Dygwgei en aryf, en esgut;
 Hu tei, en wlyd elwit.

I.

In the dales where the courses surround the Caer,* HE † arouses, who is partly covered and partly bright—soon shall the breach ‡ of slaughter be repaired.

* I retain the original word, which implies a circle, or circular temple, as well as a military fortress.

† Hu, the Helio-arkite god, who is repeatedly mentioned in the poem,

‡ The great massacre which had been recently perpetrated.

Let the renowned, the enterprising,* be lulled in sleep; and with speed let the variegated web † of heroism, with unbroken threads, be woven—the breach which has been made shall not furnish a passage.

Train up his valour to endure the toil of conflict: let him frown in arms, expert and active; but let Hu mildly warm him with his divine presence! ‡

2.

Gwr a ret pan dychelwit,
 Kywely krymdy, krymdwyn.
 Kyueiliw, nac eiliw etvrwyn.
 Nac emmel dy dywal a therwyn!
 Terwyn torret, tec teithyawl,
 Nyt aruedauc e volawt.
 Dyffryderas y vrascawt,
 Molawt rin rymidlin, rymenon.
 Dyssyllei trech tra Manon,
 Disgleiryawr, ac Archawr, Talachon;
 Ar rud Dhreic, Fud Pharaon,
 Kyueillyawr, en awel, adawarn.

* These epithets may be referred to Eidiol, or Ambrosius, whose actions are recorded in the Gododin. His sleep seems to have succeeded to the toils of the fatal morning.

† Notwithstanding the extraneous matter that is interspersed throughout the poem, the great enterprise of the Bard is the construction of this web of heroism. We learn the following particulars respecting it. The figure of the leader of the army is interwoven in the work, together with those of Hu, or the sun, and of the red dragon.

It is described as Brascawd, Magnum Sublatum, a huge, raised (standard), the glory of the great field of battle, which was to accompany the army, flying in the breeze.

There was a flowing streamer attached to it, interwoven with the threads of wrath, and it was regarded as possessing a miraculous power of protection from military disgrace. By these circumstances, I deem myself justified in styling it a magical flag, or standard, though the Bard has not expressly introduced the phrase.

‡ These directions, as well as some of the same kind which occur in the next paragraph, manifestly refer to the delineation of the commander, upon the web of heroism: and the Bard expresses himself, as if he imagined that the disposition of the figure must influence the conduct and fortunes of the man.

2.

The man who rushes forth, when the foe lie in ambush, is the bedfellow of him who rests in the narrow house, under the tumulus.—Let him have the habit, but not the disposition of the over-cautious.*

Mix not thou the cruel with the brave! If the brave be broken, fair is his unblemished character—his fame is not carried away,

I have devised a huge standard—the mysterious glory of the great field of battle, and its excessive toils. There the victor directs his view over Manon,† the luminary, the Arkite with the lofty front, and the red dragon, the Búdd (victory) of the Pharaon (higher powers)—it shall accompany the people,‡ flying in the breeze.

3.

Trengsyd a gwydei neb ae eneu,
 Y ar orthur teith teth a thedyt,
 Menit e osgord, mavr mur onwyd.
 Ar vor ni dheli
 Na chyngwyd, gil, na chyngor.
 Gordibleu eneit talachor;
 Nyt mwy ry uudyt y esgor,
 Esgor eidin rac dor.
 Kenan, kein mur e ragor,
 Gossodes ef gledyf ar glawd Meiwyr.

* That is—Let him be circumspect, but not pusillanimous. There seems to be more sober, good sense in the maxims of this paragraph, than what usually falls to the lot of a conjuror.

† Mr. Owen renders Manon, a paragon of beauty, a goddess. The word is, in this passage, connected with the masculine epithets, Disgleiriawr, the luminary, and Archawr, the Arkite. It is, therefore, a manifest title of the Helio-arkite divinity, whom the Bard also styles Talachon; which I interpret, with the lofty front: but the term may be of foreign origin, and imply Tal Chau, Sol Rex.

‡ Adav-awn, united hands: it is, perhaps, an error of the copyist for Advaön, the people.

3.

He should have perished! Even he who brought down ruin with his mouth,* by causing the army to halt on the march, when the ranks were drawn out, and his effective train was as a huge wall, mounted with ashen spears.

In the fluctuating sea,† thou canst mark neither co-operation, design, nor counsel—the front of the circling mound protects their lives; but no more can they extricate themselves, nor be delivered, before the barrier of Eidin. Kenan, the fair bulwark of excellence, set his sword upon the rampart of the celebrators of May.

4.

Budic e ren eny :
 Annavað Wledic,
 Y gynnwithic,
 Kynlas kynweis,
 Dwuyn dyvynweis.
 Kychuech ny chwyd kychwerw.
 Kychwenyches,
 Kychwenychwy Enlli weles,
 A lenwis, miran mir edles,
 Ar ystre, gan vore godemles,
 Hu tei, idware yngorvynt—
 “ Gwyr goruynnaf, ry annet,
 En llwrw rwydheu ry gollet”—
 Collwyd, medwyt menwyt.

* *A gwyddei nêb ac eneu—*who made a fall with his mouth. This sarcasm is evidently aimed at Vortigern, who checked the ardour of his victorious forces, upon the second landing of Hengist, and ratified a friendly convention with the Saxons, as I have already observed in the notes upon the Gododin. From this circumstance, the British prince obtained the opprobrious epithet, Gwrtheneu, of the ill-omened mouth.

† Alluding to the votaries of Druidism, who were thrown into the utmost confusion by the sudden massacre which took place, whilst they were celebrating the solemnities of May; and with difficulty protected their lives within the mound of the great temple, till Kenan, the prince, that is, Eidiol, or Ambrosius, rallied them from their consternation, and planned the means of defence. See the Gododin.

4.

Beneficent was the exertion of the supreme—the sovereign inclosed, for the unadvised, grey-headed chief ministers, who devised deep counsels.

The mixture of sweet* will not produce the mutually bitter—I have joined in the common wish, the general wish of those who saw Enlli,† filled with the fair aspect of returning prosperity, in the sacred course, on a serene morning, when Hu sent forth his dancing beams, making this demand—“ I require men to be born again,‡ in consideration of those liberal ones who will be lost!”—Those blessed ones—they have been intoxicated and lost!

5.

Gogled Run, Ren, ry dynnit!
 Gorthew, a'm dychuel, dychuelit,
 Gorwyd mwy galwant no melwit.
 Am rwyd, am ry, ystof lit,
 Ystof lit llib llain.
 Blin, blaen, blen blenwyd.
 Trybedavt y wledic,
 E rwng drem Dremrud:
 Dremryt, ny welet y odeu, ddogyn ryd:
 Ny welet y odeu dhogyn fyd,
 Mor eredic—Dar digeryd,
 Kentaf digonir Kanwelw,
 Kynnwythic lleithic llwyrdelw,
 Kyn y olo Goundelw,
 Taf gwr mawr y wael Maelderw.

* That is, the unanimous counsel of the hoary Druids.

† The island of Bardsea, which was sacred to the mysteries of the Helio-arkite god, whom the Bard feigns to have foretold the recent calamity by an oracle, accompanied with a prophecy of returning prosperity. This Druidical fraud must have been very seasonable in the days of Aneurin.

‡ The original is ry annet; but I think my translation is accurate: it is usual, in this ancient copy, to double the n, where the preceding vowel is long; thus cann for cán, gwynn for gwyn, &c.

5.

Is it the Northern Rhun,* O thou supreme, that thou drawest forth! The gross chief,† who has returned to me, shall be forced to retrace his steps—For steeds they call, more than for the circling mead.

In the network ‡ which surrounds the sovereign, dispose thou the threads of wrath. Dispose wrath in the flowing streamer. Irsome in front be the glance of the radiant presence! § Let the sovereign stand firm, amongst the rays of the ruddy glancer:—the ruddy glancer, whose purpose cannot be viewed in perfect freedom—whose purpose cannot be viewed, in a state of security, by those who plow the sea.

By a shout || which cannot be disparaged, the chief of pale and livid aspect—even he whose throne is involved in utter confusion, will be first convinced, before Gounddelw ¶ (the white image) is covered, that Maelderw (the proficient of the oaks) is a mighty operator.

6.

Delwat dieirydaf
Y erry par, ar delw
Rwysc rwyf bre,
Rymun gwlat,
Rymun rymdyre:

* Probably the son of Einion. This Rhun lived in the fifth century, and was styled one of the three haughty chiefs of Britain. He was the grandson of Cunedda, whose patrimony was in Cumberland and North Britain.

† Hengist, who had returned to Britain: his gross bulk is taken notice of by Cuhelyn and Aneurin.

‡ The Bard returns to his web of heroism. The threads of wrath seem to denote some colour which was hoisted, when the army neither gave nor received quarter.

§ The phrases—radiant presence, and ruddy glancer, must be referred to the Helio-arkite divinity, the patron of the pagan Britons.

|| This seems to allude to the shout of determined vengeance, described in the Gododin, Song 15.

¶ I understand this as the name of the magical standard.

Ysgavl dhisgynnyawd wlawd gymre;
 Nac ysgawt, y redec, ry gre.
 Godiweud godiwes gwlat vre;
 Ny odiweud o vevyl veint gwre.

6.

I will immortalize the form of him who brandishes the spear, imitating, in his career, the ruler* of the mount, the pervader of the land, by whose influence I am eminently moved. With active tumult did he descend to the ravine between the hills; nor did his presence form a running shadow.

Whatever fate may befall the lofty land, disgrace shall never be the portion of this assembled train!

Here Gwarchan Maelderw concludes. What follows in the Archaïologia, consists of various fragments of the Gododin; and other pieces of the sixth century. In the ancient MS. from which I copy, these detached scraps are properly separated from the preceding poem, and from each other, by large capital initials.

* The solar divinity, who, as we are here told, paid the Bard an extraordinary visit in the mystic cell.

END OF THE APPENDIX.

REMARKS

UPON

Ancient British Coins.

BEFORE I dismiss the subject of Druidism, it may not be improper to take some notice of those singular coins, which have been ascribed to the ancient Britons, and examine how far the design of the engraver harmonizes with that national superstition, which has been transmitted to us by the Bards and mythological Triads.

It is known to most readers, that these coins have been published, as British, by Camden and his editors, by Dr. Borlase, and other learned antiquaries; that repeated attempts have been made to explain them, and that, notwithstanding this, the peculiarity of their drawing has not been satisfactorily accounted for.

The reason of this difficulty, as it appears to me, is simply this: the earliest coins of the Britons, like those of most other nations, are impressed with religious, rather than with civil or military devices; and the imagery of their national superstition has not been hitherto understood by our medallists.

That these coins are genuine monuments of some nations who occupied ancient Britain, cannot be matter of doubt to the candid critic. They are often found in various districts of this island, and in no other country. It is observed, that they have a remote similarity to some old Gaulish coins, and yet retain a style and character of their own, sufficient to mark them as the property of a distinct people. This is just what might be expected, supposing that they are British, as our ancestors originally sprung from the same stock as the Gauls, with whom they maintained a religious intercourse to the very æra of the Roman conquest, though they had been for many ages locally and politically distinct from them. And lastly, Camden and his editors have shewn, that many of these coins bear the names of British princes and cities, which are well known in history. And the style and character of the pieces thus ascertained to be British, as well as the figures with which they are charged, unite them indisputably with certain more rude and uninscribed specimens, and prove them to have been the property of the same people.

As to the antiquity of these monuments, it may be remarked, that those which are inscribed with legends, generally present the names of princes who are known to have lived in the century immediately preceding the birth of Christ, or in the first century of our present æra:—as Cassivellaunus, Cunobelinus, Caractacus, Arviragus, Boadicia, &c. And these have not only inscriptions in Roman characters, but also display a comparative degree of elegance in the design and execution. Here we may imagine the drawing of the Briton corrected by the Roman artist: and this series commences with Cassivellaunus, who was contemporary with Julius Cæsar.

Upon the uninscribed coins, we generally perceive figures of the same kind; but they exhibit a drawing comparatively rude and uncouth: hence it is reasonable to infer, that they are of somewhat higher antiquity than the more finished specimens; and that they were struck sometime before the Roman invasion; and consequently, were the production of ages, during which the Britons were independent, and their religious and political establishments as yet continued to subsist.

To him who is advanced a single degree in the study of antiquity, the symbols of heathen superstition upon several of these coins, must present themselves at the first glance. We have here the figures of the sun and moon, well-known objects of British devotion; the figure of Janus, the Saidi of the Britons; the figure of Apollo with his harp, or the Beli and Tydain of the same people; with many others equally decisive. Several specimens also present masks of different shapes, implying the mysterious nature of the subject. Hence it may be conjectured, that the Britons did not intend these pieces for the common medium of trade, but that they were struck in honour of their gods, in commemoration of the solemnities of their great festivals, and upon other sacred occasions.

“with the connected serpents.” In the mystical process, the Arkite goddess devours the aspirant, when he has assumed the form of a grain of wheat: and that aspirant says of himself, that he had been a grain of the Arkites, which had grown upon a hill. Hence the priests of this goddess are styled Hodigion, bearers of ears of corn; and it was the office of Aneurin, her distinguished votary, *Amwryn ty-wysen *gortiro*t—to protect the ear of corn on the height.

Thus it appears, that this symbol was sacred to the Arkite goddess: it cannot, therefore, have represented Cunobeline as a British king, or have appertained to him, unless he was one of her priests, or, at least, an adept in her mysteries.

On the reverse of this coin is the horse, or rather the Hippa, or mare, whose form this divinity had assumed. The animal does not here exhibit the wild extravagance of a British mythologist; yet it carries certain emblems to mark its mystical character.

Over the back is a small ring or ball, from which a flame appears to ascend. Close to the mouth is a second ball, and at the other extremity a third.

The Ovum or Glain being the symbol of a priest, we may infer that the Ovum over the back of the horse, with its ascending flame, represents the presiding priest, who kept up the perpetual fire of Ceres. To this fire we have frequent allusions in the Bards, particularly in the songs of the Gododin.

As for the other two balls, or Glains, their peculiar situation seems, especially when compared with the ruder specimens, to allude to a certain process in the British mysteries. These figures being regarded as emblems of devotees, we may recollect, that both Taliesin, and the tale which describes his initiation, represent the mystical mare as devouring her novice, and afterwards reproducing him as her own offspring.

Under the belly of the horse we remark a studded circle,

* It may be proper to apprise the mythologist, that Tywysen, the Spica, also implies a general, but obscene symbol of heathenism. The curious may see an example, Camb. Reg. V. II. p. 307.

inclosing a protuberant mass, or else a concentric circle. This I have already remarked, as a symbol of the goddess of the silver wheel, who guarded the limits of the British temple.

This coin, therefore, relates solely to the honours of the British Ceres, and to those characters which superstition had placed in her retinue.

No. 5, Tab. 1. (see the plate annexed), is a silver coin, which has the name CUNOBELINE at full length: but whether the head is that of the prince who bore this title, or that of the British Apollo, must remain a question, as it has no peculiar attribute. It must be understood, that Cun implies a lord or lady; and Belin is the name of the British Apollo, or of the Helio-arkite god, the same as Hu: (see Append. No. XI.) so that Cunobelinus is nothing more than Dominus Belinus, or Dominus Sol.*

I have had occasion to observe in the preceding Essay, that it was a general practice amongst the old British princes, to assume some title of the god to whom they were devoted: and it must have been in consequence of this custom, that we had a celebrated prince, in the reigns of Augustus and Tiberius, styled Cunobelinus. This does not seem to have been his real name, but merely an assumed title; for we are told he was the father of the renowned Caractacus. (See Baxter's Glossary. V. Caractacus.) Yet the Bards and Triads always mention the father of that prince by the name of Brân, Brennus, or the raven.

On the reverse of this coin, the horse is accompanied by a crescent; whence it may be inferred, that he is merely the representative of a character, of which the moon, or a boat, in the form of a crescent, was also an emblem. But Mr. Bryant has shewn, that the crescent, whether referred to the moon or the boat, was an emblem of the Arkite goddess. The same thing appears in our national mythology.

* That the Britons understood this as a title of their Apollo, is evident, from No. 7 of this table, where Apollo appears playing upon his harp, with the inscription Cunob; and from No. 23, which presents the same figure of Apollo, with the name CUNOBELI, Dominus Beli. So Merddin mentions the seven sacred fires (q. planets?) of which Cunobeline was the first. (Append. No. IX.) And in the poem called the Talisman of Cunobeline, he is represented as a demon god.

Both Lloer, the moon, and Cwrwg, the boat, were symbols which pertained to the British Ceres. (See the poem called the Chair of Taliesin.) The horse upon this coin is, therefore, the mystical Rewys, or Ceridwen.

And it has occurred to me as a general remark, that those coins which have either the name or symbols of Belin, the Helio-arkite god, on one side, constantly discover some emblem of the Arkite goddess upon the other side; and thus connect the two great objects of superstition, which were worshipped in conjunction with the sun and moon.

Thus we find that the devices upon those specimens, which combine the native thoughts of the Britons with the simple elegance of Roman art, have a marked allusion to the worship of Ceres, and to that peculiar kind of superstition, which runs through the works of the Bards and the British Triads.

I may also add, that the legends* appear strictly appropriate to the mythology of the engraver, and confirm the idea I have suggested, as to the mystical nature of his design.

To give a few examples.—Whoever will look over Camden's tables, will perceive that the ear of corn, that favourite attribute of Ceres, is frequently depicted upon the coins which have the image of the horse. But on No. 13, the mystic animal appears without his discriminative symbols; on the reverse, however, we find the word DIAS inclosed within a curious frame. This word, in the Irish language, implies an ear of corn: it is therefore introduced instead of that sacred symbol.

It is remarkable, that the word Tasc occurs more frequently than any other upon the British coins. Tasc, in the language and orthography of the ancient Bards, signifies a pledge, or bond of confirmation. In the present Welsh it is spelt Tasg, and in Irish Taisg; and both dialects have preserved its meaning.

* * The legends or inscriptions are, undoubtedly, in the dialects of the several tribes by whom the coins were struck. These dialects may have varied in their orthography and inflexion in the course of eighteen centuries: yet it may be presumed, their radical words are to be found in the two principal branches of the ancient Celtic, namely, the language of the ancient Bards, and that of Irish MSS.

To Tasc, the letters ia, ie, or io, are often added. In order to account for them, I must observe, that De, Dia, and Dio, in several Celtic dialects, implied, God, of God, sacred, or divine. The Irish language supplies them all, either as distinct words, or in composition: and in this language the d is silenced by a point, or an h; so that Tasc-dhe, Tasc-dhia, Tasc-dhio, would be pronounced Tascie, Tascia, Tascio, the divine or sacred pledge. It may fairly be presumed, that our engravers spelt their legends as they were pronounced.

The reader will recollect that the Arkite goddess presided over corn; that she was represented as a gigantic woman, and that her favourite symbols were a mare, a bitch, and a sow. We shall find the word Tasc enter into the composition of legends which allude to her worship, under each of these symbols. Thus in Camden's first table, No. 23, we have the human head of this goddess, with the legend Tasc van it.

In the composition of Irish words, Bhan, pronounced Van, implies a woman or lady; and Ith, anciently It, is corn. In Welsh composition, Wen implies a lady, as in the sacred titles, Cerid-wen, Ol-wen, &c. and Yd, anciently It, is corn: so that Tasc Van It imports, pledge—of the lady—of corn.

Mr. Whitaker has published a coin (see the plate annexed), in which this goddess appears under the combined image of a woman and a mare, with the legend Tasc 'Ia No Van It.

Naoi, in Irish, implies a ship; and I have shewn that the Bards use Naw in the same sense, and that Aw, in a hundred instances, are contracted into o. Tasc ia no van it, implies, therefore, the sacred pledge of the ship of the lady of corn.

The same author has published a coin,* on which a child appears mounted upon a dog, with the abbreviated legend, Tasc No Va—pledge of the ship of the lady.

This must appear obscure, till we recollect that Ceridwen assumed the form of a bitch, chased the aspirant, represented as an infant, and in the mystical process caught him, and inclosed him in the sacred boat.

* See Hist. of Manchester, V. I. p. 342, and V. II. p. 67. 2d Edit.

The reader has seen a curious mythological tale, in which this lady, or her ship, is represented under the name and figure of a sow. And in Camden's table, No. 22, we see the image of the mystical sow, with the legend TASC NO VAN IT, pledge of the ship of the lady of corn.

How shall we account for these similar inscriptions upon such a variety of devices, without referring to the national mythology, which ascribed these several symbols to one and the same mystical character? On Camden's coin, No. 16, we have the horse in his natural shape, and in good proportion, but without any peculiar attribute, excepting the inscription ORCETI. This evidently consists of two British words: OR is a limit, circle, or sanctuary; and Céd, anciently written Cet, is one of the most familiar names of the British Ceres. It often occurs in the passages which I have quoted, and in the Appendix. This goddess was also called CETI, or Cetti: thus I have shewn that the Cromlech, which covered her sacred cell, was called Maen Cetti, the stone of Cetti. The Roman engraver having, for the sake of neatness, omitted the studded circle, or temple of Ceres, which generally accompanies the mystical horse, thought proper to identify his subject by adding the legend, Or Ceti, the sanctuary of Ceti.

On another of Camden's coins, No. 32, we perceive a female head, with the legend DIRETE. History mentions no queen or city of this name; but in our old orthography, Direit, and in the modern, Dyrreith, is a title of the mystical goddess, who is introduced by that name in the talisman of Cunobeline, where she assumes the form of a horse, and carries the generous hero to battle and victory.

These inscriptions, combined with the various symbols which have been remarked, are to me demonstration sufficient, that these coins are to be explained only by the mythological imagery of the Bards.

But almost every medallist who has taken them up, perceives, exclusive of the symbols I have mentioned, the figures of warriors, pieces of armour, and other military implements.

All this seems perfectly to accord with one of the uses to which they were applied.

I have promised to produce some evidence, that certain pieces of gold and silver, which answer the description of several of these coins, were regarded by the old Britons as charms or talismans, and as such delivered to those votaries of Bardism, who took up arms, when the Druids sanctioned war, for the defence of the country. What I have now to add, will shew the high probability of this curious fact, if it will not ascertain its absolute certainty.

Part of Taliesin's poem, in which he commemorates the mythological horses, has been presented to the reader. (See Append. No. V.) The Bard introduces the subject with a hymn to the sun, in which he mentions the steed of that luminary, and concludes the poem with a recital of certain symbols of Diluvian lore: whence it may be inferred, that the matter which occupies the intermediate space, pertains to the same Helio-arkite superstition.

This part of the poem is filled with an account of certain celebrated horses; and the Bard does not mean the living animals, but mere figures, which were the subject of magical preparation; for thus he brings forward his catalogue.

Nid mi gwr llwfr llwyd,
Crwybr, wrth clwyd,
Hud fy nau garant.

“ I, the grey-headed man, am no remiss character, concealing under a hurdle the magic of my two friends.”

And as it may be presumed, that these magical figures are the same to which the Bard alludes in other passages, it is evident that they were impressed upon pieces of gold and silver; for Taliesin tells us (W. Archaiol. p. 28)—

Atuyn cant ag ariant amaerwy—
Atuyn march ar eurgalch gylchwy.

“ Beautiful is the circle with its silver border—Beautiful is the horse on the gold-covered circle.”

As certain Druids, under the name of Pheryllt, were famous for some magical preparations in metal, so their art comprised the formation of these talismans, whatever they were: and to this the same Bard evidently alludes, when he says—(W. Archaiol. p. 34.)

Gwneynt eu perion
 A ferwynt heb don ;
 Gwneynt eu delidau
 Yn oes oeseu :
 Dyduth dyddyccawd
 Oddyfwedydd gwawd.

“ Then they caused their furnaces to boil, without water, and prepared their solid metals, to endure for the age of ages: the trotter (horse) was brought forth, from the “ deep promulgator of song.” And the Bard immediately proceeds to recite the mythology of the Helio-arkite god and the Arkite goddess, to whom these horses pertained.

But to go on with the song of the horses. The talismans which presented these magical figures, were of small compass. They could be conveyed, as private tokens, out of one person's hand into that of another—O'm llaw i' th law—dyt dwp dim—“ Out of my hand into thy hand—put on the “ covering, whatever it be.”

Hence it may be assumed, that these were the Arwyddon, or tokens, which the Helio-arkite god, or his priest, delivered to his votaries, and of which he demanded the exhibition, at the solemnities of his great festival--

“ Who are the three chief ministers, who have defended “ the country? Who are the three experienced men, who, “ having preserved the token, are coming with alacrity to “ meet their lord?” (See Append. No. IV.)

And not only so, but that they were the same as the Eurem and Eurell, or small pieces of gold, which the Cabiric priests displayed, as credentials of their office and authority. (See Append. No. VII.)

The proprietors of these magical horses are the gods, or distinguished votaries of the old superstition. We have here March Mayawg, the horse of Maia, the great mother, A March Genethawg, and the horse of the damsel Κορη, or Proserpine—A March Caradawg, Cymrhwy teithiawg, and the horse of Caractacus, characterised by his ring. After these, come the horse of Arthur, of Taliesin, and of Cei-diaw, the mystical father of Gwenddoleu;

Ac eraill, yn rîn,
 Rac tîr allwyn.

“ And others of mysterious power, against the afflictions
“ of the land.”

Let us now consider the shape of these talismanic horses, and we shall be convinced, that they are precisely the same monsters which are exhibited in the tables of Camden and Borlase.

The first pair are described as Deu dich far dichwant, “ the two hen-headed, unbiassed steeds.” These are the horses of the old coins. Then comes Pybyr llai llwynin, “ the strenuous horse of the gloom of the grove,” a name which marks his connection with the prevailing superstition. To him is subjoined, Cornan cynneifawg, “ the accomplished horse of the crescent.” This is the same which carried Cynvelyn and his companions to see the sacred fires of the Druids. (W. Archaiol. V. II. p. 20.)

To this succeed Tri charn aflawg, “ three horses, having the hoof, or foot, secured with a band.” They seem to be of the same kind as Carugraff, the horse of Brân, or Cunobeline, which had the ring, or band, round his foot. (W. Archaiol. p. 167.) And the same as Carn Gaffon, “ the horse which was hoofed with a circled staff, mentioned in the talisman of Cunobeline. And thus Carn Aflawg describes those horses, whose feet consisted of little staves, capped with thick rings, such as I have remarked in the Karn-brê coins, and in some of Camden’s collection. Another of these horses was—

Cethin, March Ceidiaw,
Corn avarn arnaw.

“ Hideous, the horse of Ceidio, which has the horn of Avarn.” Whatever the word Avarn may imply, I have remarked in Camden (Tab. I. No. 8. see annexed plate), a horse which truly answers the name of Ceithin, hideous, or monstrous, with a pair of large horns. This is a gold coin; and the Bards speak of the gold of Avarn (see Owen’s Dict. in voce), as having a power to arrest or pervert judgment—these tokens may have had the same influence, ad victorias litium, as the Ovum Anguinum, described by Pliny.

These remarks upon Taliesin’s Canu y Meirch, may serve to prepare the reader for an attentive perusal of the curious poem, called Gwarchan Cynvelyn. “ THE TALISMAN OF “CUNOBELINE.” In the introductory section of the preceding Essay, I inserted some passages of this poem in Mr. Owen’s translation; but not to dwell on the freedom of his version, which is not sufficiently close for a disquisition of this kind, I observe, that the text of the original, as given by Mr. Owen (Gent. Mag. Nov. 1790), is essentially different from the old copies, cited in the Welsh Archaio-gia, as well as from the still older MS. of Mr. Jones. I shall therefore give the text from the latter, with scrupulous accuracy, and add as literal a translation as the idioms of the two languages will admit: the singularity of the subject demands a few pages of introduction.

This poem has been generally ascribed to Taliesin; but it appears from internal evidence, that it is the production of Aneurin. The author speaks of himself as having been present at the fatal banquet of Catraeth, where he was wounded and made prisoner, and from whence he narrowly escaped with his life. This was the peculiar fate of Aneurin, as we learn by his Gododin.

The date of the composition must be, somewhere in the interval, between the massacre of the British nobles, and the death of Hengist; for the Bard deplores the fall of the former, and denounces vengeance against the Saxon king.

The design of the poem is to excite the spirit of the Britons, to retaliate upon their enemies, and to assert their own independence. With this view the Bard, whether in compliance with his own fanatical delusion, or as an artful manager of the prevailing superstition, enlarges upon the awful consequences that would ensue, were he to practise certain magical rites in the exhibition of a charm or talisman. Whilst he is descanting upon this subject, his indignation bursts forth, he has recourse to his mystic art, and the talisman is produced. The power of this spell is declared to be such, that it would safely guard the patriotic warrior through every hazardous enterprise, and ensure the destruction of the treacherous foe. With this solemn mummary, our magician mixes some elogia upon certain distinguished characters, who had bravely defended their country, or gloriously fallen in the assertion of its cause. These parts I shall pass over at present, and offer some remarks upon the connection of the Bardic talisman, with those uncouth figures which appear upon the ancient British coins.

In the opening of the poem, the Bard announces his charm, as comprising, 1. Gorchegin, the high shoots, such as were used in the formation of lots, or omen-sticks; 2. Gweilging, the wand or gestamen of the divining Bard; and 3. Torch, the wreath or coil.

This word generally implies the wreath or torques of gold which the noble Briton wore about his neck; but Aneurin uses the term, to describe the diadem or wreath that surrounded the temples of a prince—Torchawr am rân; and it is here called the wreath of the unobstructed pervader; that is, of the solar divinity, whose laurel wreath so frequently occurs upon the old coins, together with the lots, and the sacred wand or branch.

Mr. Owen's copy, instead of Trychdrwydd, the title of the Helio-arkite god, reads Twrch Trwyth, the boar of the spray, a personage often introduced in the ancient tales. But whether this variation is from authority, or conjectural amendment, it comes nearly to the same point. The mythological boar and sow were the Arkite god and goddess. The boar of the spray was the son of Taredd, the pervasion; and An Taredd is a name of the deluge. (See Appendix, No. XII.) Edward Llwyd quotes the following passage relative to this character, out of an old mythological narrative,

Ny ladavd namyn un parchell, o voch y
Twrch Trwyth. Gouynnvys y gyvr y
Arthur, beth oed ystyr yr hveli hunnv:
Y dyvavt ynte, Brenhin uu.*

“Of the swine of Twrch Trwyth, only one little pig was slain. The men inquired of Arthur, the import of that hog; and he replied, He was a king.”

But what figure were the shoots, the wand, and the wreath or circle, when duly adjusted, to produce upon the face of the Bardic talisman? We find it was the figure of a horse. This horse, however, was of the same monstrous shape as those which we often contemplate upon the ancient coins.

In the first place, he is named Try-Chethin, thoroughly monstrous or hideous, which is the same as the Cethin of

* Yst. K. ab Kilydh. Archaiol. Brit. p. 236.

Taliesin and the Triads. He is described as cut off at the haunches—these are distinguishing features of the figure upon the Karn-brê and some other British coins. He is called Carn Gaffon—his hoof or foot consisted of the Caffon, stick, which was guarded at the end with a band or ring, or else staff of fear: this must imply, either the divining lot, or the augural staff; both of which appear in the Nummi Britannici.

The talismanic horse had short, detached Esgyrn (bones), or, according to the copy in the Welsh Archaiology, Esyn, legs: and this is also a mark of the figure upon the mysterious coins.

Again: it had short, diminutive riders. By this phrase, the magical Bard may have intended the lunettes, glains, and trefoil leaves, so often found upon the back of the horse in the British coins.

And to fix at once the character of the talismanic horse, he had the beak or bill of a bird. This is evidently the great enigma of the British coins, which I have already expounded.

The particulars hitherto related, are found in the Bard's introductory boast. When he comes in the next paragraph actually to produce his talisman, it appears that the first ceremony was the due breaking of the rods, or the formation of lots. He then exhibits the mystical horse, which was to be delivered to the patriotic warriors severally, together with the nail or rivet, the border, the high-rimmed vessel, and the gem or glain, figures which may easily be recognised in the old medals. And these symbols were to be conveyed to them, upon the gold which was distributed. Hence it is clear, that the characters of this talisman were impressed upon a piece of gold, or gilded metal, and that the device was not confined to a single copy; but that a sufficient number of duplicates were procured for those persons who had a claim to receive them. And we are told in the conclusion of the poem, that the sons of the awful omen, or those who had a right to approach the sacred fire, possessed them in common.

The charm thus conveyed to the votaries of Druidism, and their patriotic warriors, was emphatically styled Gwar- chan Cynvelyn, the talisman of Cunobeline. It must then have consisted of certain pieces, ascribed to Cunobeline, which contained a magical device. It is known to every antiquary, that this is the name which most frequently occurs upon the British coins: and as it implies Dominus Belinus, sc. Sol, those specimens which exhibit the attributes of the solar divinity, though they want the title, may be deemed sacred to him.

This talisman was regarded as the highest acquisition of magical rites, and as the shield of the sacred festival, with which the man of fortitude repelled the affliction of his country.

To this reputation it must have had an undoubted claim, could the Bards have made good all their assertions in its favour. For it was announced as an infallible pledge, that Cynvelyn himself (here the magician must mean the demon god), and a goddess, named Dyrraith, would assume the forms of horses, and carry the patriotic heroes through the perils of battle; whilst the Gwyllion, or Gallicenæ, those mysterious priestesses, or island nymphs, who had the power, se in qua velint animalia vertere (Pomp. Mela, L. III. c. 8.) to assume the form of whatever animals they pleased, would attend the expedition, and pronounce their blessing upon the sanctified cause.

DYRRAITH, who is here associated with the Helio-arkite god, is described as of equal rank with Mor-ion, Janus Nauta. As her name implies she was the goddess of fate, or necessity, the same who conducted the Ogdoad through the deluge (see Append. No. III.), and therefore the Arkite goddess, who was venerated in the form of a mare.

Dyrraith is, undoubtedly, the same name which appears upon the old coins, under the softened orthography of DI-RETE. Her head is that of an unadorned female, and the reverse has the horse, with some complex figure upon his back. (See Gibson's Camden, Tab. I. No. 32.)

When it was requisite for the defence of her votaries, the British Ceres assumed the character of a fury, and in that department she appropriates a variety of names.

Mr. Baxter (Glossar. Antiq. Britan.), under the article Andrasta, has remarked the following—Etiam hodiè An- dras, &c.—“ Amongst our Britons, even of the present day, Andras is a popular name of the goddess Malen, or the lady, whom the vulgar call Y Vall, that is, Fauna, Fatua, and Mam y Drwg, the Devil's dam, or Y Wrach, the old hag. - - - Some regarded her as a flying spectre. - - - That name corresponded not only with Hecate, Bellona, and Enyo, but also with Bona Dea, the great mother of the gods, and the terrestrial Venus. - - - In the fables of the populace, she is styled Y Vad Ddu Hyll, that is, Bona Furva Effera; and, on the other hand, Y Vad Velen, that is, Helena, or Bona Flava. - - - Agreeably to an ancient rite, the old Britons cruelly offered human sacrifices to this Andrasta; whence, as Dion relates, our amazon, Vondicca (Boadicia) invoked her with imprecations, previous to her engagement with the Romans. The memory of this goddess, or fury, remains to the present day; for men in a passion growl at each other, Mae rhyw Andras, arnochwi, Some Andrasta possesses you.”

And again, under the article Minervæ.

“ Malen is a popular name amongst the Britons, for the fury Andrasta, or, as the vulgar call her, the Devil's dam. Fable reports, that she had a magical horse, called March Malen, upon which sorcerers were wont to ride through the air. Whence the common proverb seems to have taken its rise—A gasgler ar Varch Malen dan ei dor ydd â—What is gotten on the back of the horse of Malen, will go under his belly.”

This magical horse of tradition is, undoubtedly, the same which our tuncful wizard is conjuring up in the poem before us: and, from the description of his points, he may surely be recognized in the portentous monsters, which are found upon the old British coins. Here it may be remarked, that the office of our Bard was not to design the figure of the horse, or to strike the talismanic coins. They had been already formed and deposited in a sacred stream,* from

* I have remarked (Sect. II.) that it was a custom of the Celtæ, mergere, to sink or deposit their gold and silver in sacred lakes or streams. As this rite was performed under the direction of the priests, or Druids, they knew undoubtedly where to find their treasure again, when it was wanted. Thus the Bard speaks of the recovery of the old talismanic pieces of Trychdrwydd, the unob- whence he was, ritually, to procure them, and deliver them, auspiciously, to their respective claimants. But let us hear his words.

GORCHAN KYNVELYN.

1.

Pei mi brytwn, pei mi ganwn,
 Tardei warchan, gorchegin,
 Gweilging, torch Trychdrwyd.
 Trychethin trychinfwrch
 Kyrchesit, en avon,
 Kynn noe geinnyon.
 Tyllei garn gaffon,
 Rac carneu riwrhon
 Ryveluodogyon.
 Esgyrn vyrr, vyrrvach varchogyon,
 Tyllei Ylvach
 Gwryt govurthiach.

CUNOBELINE'S TALISMAN.

1.

Were it that I performed the mystic rite: were it I that sung, a talisman would spring forth—the high shoots, the wand, the wreath of the unobstructed pervader.* The most hideous form, even that which is cut off from the haunches, should be procured in the river, rather than his beautiful steeds.

The (horse),† which is hoofed with the capped stick, structed pervader, who was the same as Cunobeline, Dominus Sol; and it is remarkable, that he prefers as most efficacious, those which resemble the Karn-brê coins; and exhibit the monstrous figures, cut off at the haunches. These pieces, then, were deemed magical, and duly concealed by the Druids, in order to be re-produced upon some urgent occasion.

* That is, the solar divinity, who is often described by similar epithets. See Append. No. II. It appears from this poem, that he was the same as Kynvelyn.

† As it is the property of this kind of poetry to be dark and mysterious, the word March, horse, is not introduced; but the horse-hoofs, horse-tails, and horse- would penetrate before the high-tailed steeds of those who delight in war.

With its short bones, and short, diminutive riders, the horse with the bird's-beak would pierce the mean afflicter of heroism.*

2.

Ryt gwynn! rae Eingyl,
 Yawn llad. Yawn vriwyrn vri wyal.
 Rac canhwynawl kann,
 Lluc yr duc dyvel,
 Disgynnial alel,
 Y bob dewr dy sel,
 Trwy hoel, trwy hemm,
 Trwy gibellawr, a gemm,
 Ac eur ar dhrein.
 A galar dwvyn—dyvyd
 Y wynnassed velyn,
 E greu oe gylchyn,
 Keledic ewyn
 Med, mygyr, melyn:
 Eil greu oe gylchyn,
 Rac cadeu Kynvelyn.

2.

“ O blessed ford! † against the Angles, slaughter is just.
 The dignified rods ‡ have been duly broken.

Before him who carries the mystery of song, a gleam of light shall conduct the warrior, endowed with power, to descend into every brave enterprise, which his eye shall ken by the nail, and the border, and the high-rimmed vessel, and the gem, with the gold which is distributed. And deep woe shall accrue to the yellow-haired afflicter, who is covered with clotted gore, concealing the foam of the re-riders, which are connected with the mystical figure, unequivocally explain the meaning of the Bard. I may add, that the figure is here named Try-Chethin, which is a compound of Cethin, hideous, the title of the mystical horse, in Taliesin and the Triads.

* Hengist, who comes under similar descriptions in the songs of the Gododin.

† The Bard has now approached the sacred stream, which he propitiates, in order to procure his charm, with auspicious rites.

‡ The Bardic lots, so often mentioned.

nowned yellow mead.* Again shall he be covered with gore, from the battles of Cunobeline.

3.

Kynvelyn gasnar,
 Ysgwn, bryffwn bar,
 Goborthiat adar,
 A'r denin dwyar,
 Dyrreith, grad Voryon,
 A dan vordwy't haelon :
 Kyvret, kerd Wyllyon,
 A'r welling diryon.
 Teyrn tut anaw !
 Ys meu e gwynaw,
 Eny vwyf y dyd taw.
 Gomynyat gelyn,
 Ehangsett ervyn.
 Gochawn kyrd keinmyn
 Yw gwarchan Kynvelyn.

3.

Cunobeline the indignant, the lofty leader of wrath, pamerer of the birds of prey, and that divine allurer, Dyrreith, of equal rank with Morion, shall go under the thighs of the liberal warriors. In equal pace shall the Gwyllion proceed, with the benign blessing.

Supreme ruler † of the land or harmony ! It is mine to lament him, till I come to the day of silence. Hewer down of the foe, the weapon should have been stretched forth. Amongst the splendid acquisitions of the mystic lore, the most majestic is the talisman of Cunobeline.

4.

Gorchan Kynvelyn, kylchwy wylat,
 Etvyn gwr gwned gwyned e wlat.

* This is a horrid picture of Hengist, issuing forth from the great banquet, covered with the blood of the British nobles. The Bard denounces, that he should, ere long, be stained with his own gore, from the assault of Cunobeline, or the solar divinity : so Aneurin describes his defeat before the bull of battle, and the herds of the roaring Beli.

† Probably the chief Bard, who was slain at the feast, and deplored by Cuhelyn and Aneurin.

By thus intermixing lamentations for the dead, with the eulogia of his talisman, the Bard seems to insinuate, that the woful catastrophe might have been prevented, by a timely exhibition of his vaunted charm.

Dychiannawr dewr; dychianat
 Eidyn gaer, gleissson glaer, Kyverthryneit.
 Kein dy en rud, enys, gwerth rud
 Volawt, ved, meirch.
 Eithiny'n neut ynt blennyd!
 Gwarchan Kynvelyn, ar Ododin,
 Neus goruc, O dyn, dogyn gymhwylleit!
 E wayw drwn, oreureit—a'm rodes,
 Poet yr lles yw eneit.
 Etmygir e, vab Tecvann,
 Wrth rif, ac wrth rann.
 Pan vryrywt arveu,
 Tros ben cat vleidyau,
 Buan deu, en dyd reit.

4.

The talisman of Cunobeline is the shield* of the festival, with which the man of fortitude repels the affliction of his country.

The brave are lamented; and let the Caer of Eidyn † (the living one) bewail the blue-vested, ‡ illustrious men, who were martyred together. Yet fair is thy ruddy genius, § O island, meriting the glowing hymn, the mead and the steeds.

Does not the furze bush burst forth into a blaze! And has not the talisman of Cunobeline, upon Gododin, || made a sufficient commemoration, with a direct impulse?

As for him who consigned to me the shaft of the gold-

* Hengist had excluded shields from the festival; but, it seems, this charm would repair the injury which ensued upon that occasion, and enable the patriotic warriors to drive out the invader of their country.

Such infallible trinkets must have often deceived the wearer; but an ill-omened expression, or the slightest instance of misconduct, was always sufficient to account for the accident, and support the credit of the solemn impostor.

† This is mentioned in the Gododin, and in Gwarchan Maelderw. It seems to imply the great temple.

‡ The Bards were distinguished by their blue garments.

§ Gén, or En, a spirit, or intelligence—the presiding divinity.

|| It should seem, that the Bard imputed his escape from the feast, and consequently the opportunity of composing his Gododin, to the virtue of his talisman.

covered circle,* may it be for the benefit of his soul! He, the son of Tecvan,† shall be honoured, in numbering, and in distribution—the grandson of the horn of battle—that pillar of sun-beams. When weapons were hurled over the heads of the wolves of battle, with speed did he come forward in the day of distress.

5.

Trywyr, a thriugeint, a thrychant,
 I vreithyell Gatraeth yd aethant:
 O'r sawl yt gryssyassant,
 Uch med menestri,
 Namen tri, nyt atcorsant.
 Kynon, a Chadreith, a Chathlew, o Gatnant ‡
 A minheu, o'm creu, dychiorant
 Mab coel kerth, vyg werth y a wnaethant;
 O eur pur, a dur, ac aryant.
 Evnyved, nyt nodet, e cawssant:
 Gwarchan kyrd Kynvelyn kynnovant.

5.

Three heroes, and three score, and three hundred,‡ went to the mixed assembly of Catraeth: of those who presented themselves in haste before the distributors of mead, none but three returned, namely, Kynon, and Cadreith, and Cathlew, of Cadnant—I also, with my bloody wound, was bewailed by the sons of the awful omen (sacred fire), who contributed my ransom in pure gold, and steel, and silver.

The portable sacred pledge, unobserved, have they obtained. Cunobeline's mystic talisman they possess in common.

Thus ends the poem upon the talisman of Cunobeline.

Being now about to take my leave of the reader, I would request his attention to these memorable facts. The old Britons, as their own writings testify against them, in an

* This shaft was probably the Hudlath, magic wand, or the Cangen, branch, which was carried by the divining Bard.

† Perhaps an error of the copyist for Tenevan, the traditional father of Cunobeline.

‡ These were the heroes whose fall is mourned in the Gododin; which see.

age of the greatest public calamity, and after the gospel had been published in their land, neglected the worship of the true god, and sought protection from heathenish rites, charms, and incantations. These vanities deceived them; their crimes were justly punished, and they lost their political existence.

As to the nature of the charms to which they had recourse, I have shewn, from Taliesin, that they had certain magical figures of horses, impressed upon small pieces of gold and silver, which were delivered to the deluded people as pledges of supernatural assistance; that these figures were sacred to the gods of heathenism; were deemed efficacious for the defence of the country, and were precisely of the same form, as the monsters which we find upon the ancient British coins.

To this I have added Aneurin's account of a talisman, for the protection of the patriotic warrior, and the destruction of the foe. This talisman had those very symbols which we discover on the coins, and they were so adjusted, as to constitute the figure of a horse, of the same monstrous form which the coins exhibit, and with the same accompaniments. This talisman was impressed upon gold; many duplicates of it were provided, and it was emphatically styled the talisman of Cunobeline. Its preparation was deemed the highest effort of British magic; it was the shield of the solemn festival, sacred to the Arkite god and goddess, whose names and attributes appear upon the coins; and it was given to the warriors as a certain pledge, that these divinities would attend them in their enterprise.

If all this will not produce conviction, that many of the British coins, published by our antiquaries, are the identical talismans intended by our Bardic magi, I have nothing more to urge. Yet I trust, however this may be determined, that the candid critic will acquit me of having taken up the idea upon slight or improbable grounds, and that he will acknowledge, that the Britons ascribed supernatural virtues to some trinkets, of similar device.

But whilst I leave the original use and application of these coins to the judgment of the public, I must declare my own conviction, that the symbols and inscriptions which I have remarked, agree so minutely with the lore of the Bards and Triads, that it is evident, our writers and engravers had precisely the same system in view. And this unity of design gives the strongest support to the credit of our national monuments.

The fabrication of the coins cannot be stigmatized as a modern device for the purpose of elucidating the Bards: nor will the judicious critic assert, that the works of the Bards are recent forgeries, with a view to the explanation of the coins. Both the one and the other have remained inexplicable for ages; but, in my opinion, they may now be regarded as consistent, not only amongst themselves, but also, allowing for local peculiarities, with the most ancient and general system of mythology, developed by two of the first antiquaries of our age.

The Bards, the mythological Triads, and the coins, are therefore proved by mutual evidence, in which there can be no collusion, to be genuine monuments of the heathenish superstition of Britain.

And they unite in their testimony, that this superstition, notwithstanding the singularity of a few minuter features, could boast of no great and fundamental principle, which was appropriate to itself. Like the general error of other nations, it consisted of certain memorials of the preservation of mankind at the deluge, and some perverted reliques of the patriarchal religion, blended with an idolatrous worship of the host of heaven.

INDEX

TO THE

Mythology and Rites of the British Druids.

A

- Abyss, the abode of an evil principle, 49
 Account of the British Triads, 27
 Acorns offered by the bards, 503
 Actions of Eidiol, or Ambrosius, 343, 349
 Adar Ban, birds of augury, 509
 Adder, symbolical, 544
 Addwyn Gaer, 507, &c.
 Adras, a mystical character, 449
 Adytum of Stonehenge, 304—of a bardic temple, 384
 Aedd, the arkite god or his priest, 122, 259
 Aeddon, 117, 348—elegy of, 553
 Aeron, the splendid one, 338
 Aervre, battle of, 343
 Aetherical temple, 353
 Agitators of fire, 531
Al adur, a sacred title, 528
 Ἀλαδὲ Μυσαι, 237
 Allegory relating to mystic rites, 419
 Amber, 339—wreath of Hengist, 327
 Ambrosial stones, 385
 Ambrosius poisoned by Eppa, 344
 Amreeta, the water of immortality, 227
 Anachronism of the chair of Glamorgan, 33
 Analogy between the British and Greek rites, 220, 221—and mysteries, 262
 Ancient bards, 2
 Andras, Andrasta, a British goddess, 617
 Aneurin, an ancient bard, 2—not degraded for having seen naked swords, 62—mythology of, 113—a North Briton,—his age, 317—authorities and vouchers of, 322, 347—wounded, 341—a prisoner, 356—corresponds with Taliesin, ib.—released by a son of Llywarch, 357—takes a retrospect of historical events, 377—is a half pagan, 386
 Angar, 52—son of Ladon, 526
 Anghen, the goddess of necessity, 188
 Angor, a sacred title, 116, 367
 Angues, druids, 18
 Anguinum, 208, 209, 419, 577
 Animal kept by the druids, 138, 524
 Annwn, the deep, the abyss, 198, 206
 Anwas, the winged, a mystical character, 288
 Ape, sacred, 122, 568
 Aphorisms of the bards, 75
 Apology for the ancient triplets, 76—for Arkite mythology, 90
 Appeal from the chair of Glamorgan to ancient documents, 36
 Apple-tree, symbolical, 11, 284
 Apple-trees of Merddin, 465, 480
 Arawn the arkite, king of the deep, 198, 417, 420
 Arberth, a seat of mysticism, 418, 422
 Arbor frugifera, 23
 Arcol, a mystical character, 414, 415
 Arderydd ag Eryddon, battle of, 463, 474, 480.
 Area of blood, 544
 Aren, the ark, 193
 Arenees, temple of Apollo in the, 194
 Argat, the ark, 200
 Argoed, men of, made a league with Hengist, 379
 Arianrod, 205, 266—the rainbow, 268—daughter of Don, 205—of Beli, 447
 Ariant Gwion, 275
 Ark, worshipped in conjunction with the moon, 90—symbolized by islands and rafts, 154, 160—deified and represented as the mother, the consort, or the daughter of its builder, 178
 Ark of Aeddon, 118, 554—of the world, a name of the bardic temple, 113, 369, 393—arkite, 584
 Arkite cell inclosed fire, 199—arkite goddess, 175—venerated by the Germans, 179—of the druids, 183—god, titles of, 559
 Arkite lore, 507, &c. 555—memorials, 170—established in Britain, 266, 267—rites, prevalent in Britain, 131, 184, 537—sanctuary, 157—temple in Monmouthshire, 434—theology of the druids, 492—arose from the corruption of the patriarchal religion, 495—why incorporated with Sabian idolatry, 493, &c.
 Arkites styled just ones, 118
 Arthur, a mythological character, 187, 188, 199, 202, 394, 404, 432, 522

- Arthur's llyn lliou, 143—stone, a cromlech, 394—table, 396
- Arts of the pheryllt, 215
- Ascending stone of the bards, 250
- Aspirant, a mystical infant, 230, 233—swallowed by the arkite goddess, 230—cast into the sea, ib.
- Associates, the society of bards, 369
- Astronomical principles remarked in the British temples, 302, &c.
- Astronomy of the druids, 53, 217
- Atlantis, the antediluvian continent, 143
- Auchinleck MS. 447
- Augur, in the act of divining, 512
- Augury of the druids, 44—by birds, 39
- Authenticity of the mystical poems, 5
- Authorities from the bards, why inserted at length, 86
- Authority of the arch-druid, 57—of princes, supported by the bards, 59—of the small sprigs, or lots, 487
- Avagddu, son of Ceridwen, 190, 203, 204—the same as Elphin, 241—regenerated, 263
- Avalen beren, arbor frugifera, 23, 483
- Avanc, 95—the shrine of the patriarch, 142, 267—the beaver, an emblem of the patriarch, 129
- Avaon, 135, 200
- Avenue to Stonehenge, 371
- Awen, o bair Kyrridwen, 20—origin of, 40—renders the aspirant complete, 256—a mystical character, 468—the bardic muse, 528
- Awyr, the sky, a name of the open temple, 353
- B
- Bacchanalian rites, 169
- Bacchus worshipped in Britain, 89—the helio-arkite Noah, 127—inventor of agriculture, 128—styled a bull, 127, 174
- Βασιλῆα, conical stones, which represented the gods, 389
- Bala, the going forth, 192
- Balls and rings on British coins, 600, 605
- Banawg, what, 128
- Ban carw, battle of, 359
- Bane of corruption, 142
- Bangu, a sacred ox, 140, 141
- Banners of the bards, 20
- Banquet of mead, 313—mystical, 422
- Bard, what the term anciently imported, 467
- Bard slain at the feast at Stonehenge, 313, 317, 326, 353, 362
- Bardd Cadair, 25, 200—Caw, 165—Ogyrven, 17
- Bardic enigmas, how to be expounded, 405—mount of assembly, 489—petition, 16—questions, 52—vow, 285—worship, 17
- Bardism of the chair of Glamorgan, 32—supported the spirit of independence, 283
- Bards, an order connected with the druids, 11—constituted judges, 12, 19—disciples of the druids, 9, 84—priests of the ancient Britons, 337—professed magic, 42—promised to recant before their death, 283—sometimes warriors, 63—works of, genuine, 3—consistent with history, 88—town of, in Anglesea, 399—of Beli, 457—of the household, 271, 272—of the middle ages, 9
- Bardsea, 164, 503
- Bath, mystical, 218
- Battle of Gwenystrad, 62—of mystery, 133
- Bear, representative of Arthur, 187
- Beaver, 129—emblem of Noah, 267—see Avanc.
- Bed of mystery, 422—bed dilan, 193—Tidain, ib.—beddau, heathen sanctuaries, ib.
- Bedwen, a may-pole, phallus, &c. 539
- Bedwyr, son of Pedrawc, a mystical character, 340—phallus, 441
- Bees, deposited by the mystical sow, 426—symbols of arkite ministers, 433
- Belenus, a Celtic god, 116—temple of, in the Arenes, 194
- Beli, name of Hu, the helio-arkite god, 116, 121, 143, 562—son of Manhogan, 436—herds of, 352
- Beliagog, 457
- Benefits of initiation, 252
- Berwr Taliesin, 275
- Beverage of the festival, 509
- Bird, transformation of Gwion, 230, 235—of augury, 509—of Gwenddoleu, 463—of wrath, 266, 287, 560
- Birth of Taliesin, mystical, 239
- Bitch, transformation of Ceridwen, 232
- Black horse of the seas, a sacred ship, 475
- Black stone, 427, 437
- Blanche Flour, a mystical lady, 447, 455
- Blessed ones, Menwyd, 172
- Blue robes of the bards, 14
- Boar, arkite symbol, 425, 442—of the spray, 614
- Boar's heads, arms of Sir Tristrem's knights, 450
- Boat, attribute of Ceridwen, 186, 237—of Ked, 176—vale of the, 418—boat of glass, 211, 277.
- Boiling of the mystical cauldron, 213
- Books of astronomy, 213—of the druids, 266—of the pheryllt, 213

- Botany of Ceridwen, 213
 Bradwen, Rowena, 354, 361
 Branch, sacred, 206—of the bards, 371
 Bread and wine offered by the druids, 280
 Breaking of sprigs, 359, 359
 Brengwain, Bronwen, Proserpine, 452
 Brewer of the mystical cauldron, 279
 Brindled ox, 138, 523
 British Ceres, 184—council, over ruled by Vortigern, 361—documents, 1—corroborated by mutual evidence, 624
 British mythology, how far investigated by the author, 85—analogue to that of early heathens, 123—arkite, 289
 Britons addicted to magical rites, 37—hyperboreans, 131
 Bro yr Hùd, land of mystery, 417
 Bronwen, daughter of Llyr, 400
 Bryant's heathen theology, 90
 Brychan instructs the Welsh in the Christian faith, 282
 Brynach, a northern mystagogue, 427, 462
 Brython, inhabitants of ancient Britain, 506
 Buanawr, a sacred title, 539
 Buarth Beirdd, 136, 535
 Bùdd, victory, a sacred title, 364, 584
 Bùdd, Buddugre, titles of Hu, 116
 Bùd Nèr, god of victory, 468
 Bùddud, Buddug, goddess of victory, 314, 317
 Buddvan, horn of victory, 344
 Buddwas, a title of Hu, 118, 557
 Bull, 127, 200—of battle, 116, 133, 351, 359, 363—Beer lled, 120, 137, 537—Beli, 134—of brass, 131—demon, 135, 478—emblem of the patriarch, 131—of flame, 137—of fire, 537—of the host, 347, 373—mystical, 465, 577—sovereigns, 134—of the sphere, 133
 Bull, title of the god, or his priest, 172 slain, ib.
 Bull and dragon, sacred to Hu, considered as Bacchus, 128
 Bulwark of battle, sacred title, 362
 Bùn, the maid, the British Proserpine, 327, 445, 468, 484, 488
 Buto, sacred lake of, 159
 C
 Cabiri, 216—Cabiritic divinity, Noah, 216—rites, arkite, ib.
 Cad Goddeu, a mystical poem, 100, 538
 Cadair Ceridwen, 260—Teyrn On, 120, 527—Taliesin much older than the sixth century, 280—Vaelgwn, 22
 Cadair, an amicable knight, 199
 Cadeiriath Saidi, 199, 292, 324
 Cadvaon, conference of, 488
 Cadwaladr, supreme ruler of battle, a name of Hu, 121, 488
 Caer, a name of the sacred ship, and druidical sanctuary, 154
 Caer, or sanctuary of Ceridwen, 285, 286
 Caer Conan, 352—Echinig, 335—Pedryvan, 517—Rheon, seat of the northern druids, 478—Seon, 169, 448, 546, 547
 Caer Sidi, 201, 292, 299, 407, 515, 516—represented as a floating vessel, 154—implied the ark, 293—the zodiac, ib.—the druidical temple, 294—circle of revolution, 294—sanctuary of Ceres, 295—form of, 296, &c.—pourtrayed on the sacred shield, 544
 Caer Wydyr, name of the ark, 212, 521
 Caers which represented the ark, 516—sacred, 531
 Cæsar's accurate information relative to the druids, 45
 Cainc yr ychain Banawg, 129
 Caledonia, forest of, the haunt of Merddin, 73, 552
 Caledonian druids, respected by the southern Britons, 475—wood, seat of the northern druids, 409
 Cantref y Gwaelod, 241
 Canu y hyd mawr, 53
 Car of Hu, drawn by oxen, 139
 Caradoc, character of, 347
 Cardigan bay, 162, 242, 251
 Caredig, caradwy e glod, 346
 Carns, attached to temples, 301
 Carousal of the bards, 136
 Casnodyn, 35—describes the day of judgment, 101
 Cat, paluc, 427
 Cathedral bard, 272
 Cath Vraith, 438
 Cattræth, import of, 323, &c.—place of conference with Hengist, 331
 Cauldron, mystic, 16, 21—of Awen, 530—of Ceres, 222—of Ceridwen, 20, 26, 185, 213, 265, 502—what it implied, 217—divided, 214—an emblem of the deluge, 225, &c.
 Cauldron of the ruler of the deep, 119, 165—warmed by the breath of nine damsels, 518—cauldron of five plants, 279
 Cave of the arch diviner, 73—sacred, 456
 Cedig, title of the arkite goddess, 464
 Ceidiaw, mystical father of Aurelius, 377
 Celestial circle, name of a druidical temple, 41, 138, 550
 Cell of Kêd, 372—of initiation, 236, 390—mystical, 537—of the tauriform god, 137
 Cells pertaining to British temples, 301

- Celtæ, had Cabiritic rites, 216—were governed by their priests, 386
- Celtic glory, deplored by Aneurin, 379]
Cenig y Gododin, 321
- Cerddglud Clyd Lliant, 467
- Cerdd Ogyrven, 14
- Ceremony of arkite procession, 537—of the bardic feast, 370—of degradation, 64—of drawing the avanc out of the lake, 129—meaning of, 170
- Ceres worshipped in Britain, 89—of the Britons, 184—symbolized by the moon, 279—worshipped in the twelfth century, 286
- Ceridwen, 175, 205—the Ceres of Britain, 185, 289—described as a fury, 229, &c. 260—as a botanist, 213—as the first of womankind, 184—as a giantess, 256—as the goddess of corn, 8—as the modeller of youth, 285—as the moon, 270—as a mystic goddess, 18—as ruler of bardism, 20—as a sailing vessel, 256—transformed into a bird, 390—cauldron and sanctuary of, 502—extraordinary endowments of, 169, 265—various emblems of, 257—how described in the twelfth century, 284—worshipped in the twelfth century, conjointly with the moon, 285
- Ceto, the ark, 114
- Ceuant Beilliawg, 247
- Chain of the sacred oxen, 111, 129, 141—of the diluvian patriarch, 137, 515
- Chair, bardic, 502—of Caer Sidi, 292, 295—of Caer-marthen, 33—of Ceridwen, a mystical poem, 265—imitated by Mcilyr, 10—of Glamorgan, 32, 35, 56, &c.—of the solar divinity, 523, 531—of Taliesin, 73, 269
- Challenge from the chair of Glamorgan, 64
- Character of Ceredig, 346—of Ceridwen, 183, &c.—of Hu, compared with Noah, 111—of the patriarch, in British mythology, 105, &c.—of Taliesin, mystical, 239
- Characters supported by the mystic priests, 289
- Cherisher, or brooding hen, Ceridwen, 259
- Chest of the aspirants, 255
- Chief druid, sovereign of Britain, 119, 122
- Chief singer of Noë, 114
- Child of the sun, 488—of Teithan, that is, the helio-arkite god, 114
- Chinese tradition of the deluge, 149
- Christianity of the Welsh bards, blended with druidism, 17
- Cibddar, mystic, 154, 200
- Circle of Anoeth, 314—of gems, 544—of the mystical tree, 489—of Sidin, that is, the zodiac, 296—of stones, 121, 486—of twelve stones, 302—a term for a British temple, 313—of the world, name of a bardic temple, 113, 266, 369—circle with its cromlech, 513—circle and wand of the magician, 42
- Circles of rude stones in druidical temples, 387
- Circular dance, 172—entrenchment, 300, 585—temple, with its central cromlech, 395—temples, sacred to the sun and Vesta, 304—destroyed, 550
- Cities of Cantre'r Gwaelod, 242
- City of the bards, 23, 350
- Clattering of shields in a British procession, 172—of arms in the festival of Bacchus, 175
- Clergy and monks persecute the bards, 283
- Clydnaw, ship-bearer, a mystical character, 364
- Code of the chair of Glamorgan, 32—objections to the authority of, 33
- Coelbreni, 43, 490
- Coins, British, 539—display the image of Ceridwen, 257—antiquity of, 590—impressed with sacred symbols, 589, 590—exhibit druid temples, 591—found at Karn-brê, 591—regarded as druidical badges, 591—impressed with magical devices, 591—talismanic, 593, 610—design of, consistent with bardic imagery, 598—legends of, 607.—See Horse.
- Coll, son of Collvrewi, 426, 428—a Cornish mystagogue, 429—foreigner, 446
- Collar of the sacred ox, 138, 524
- Colours of the glains, 211
- Columba persecutes Merddin, 471—
- Commemoration of the deluge in China, 150
- Community of bards, 473
- Complete system of druidism exhibited by Taliesin, 58
- Completion, a mystical term, 288
- Compound figure of the arkite goddess, 257
- Concealing of the dragons, what it implied, 244
- Connexion of mystical characters, 241, 244
- Consecration, by the water of the cauldron, 219
- Constellation Iyra, the harp of Arthur, 187—constellation representing the chief druid, 544
- Convolutions of the bards, 278

- Côr, circle, appellative of a druidical temple, 299—Côr Kyvoeth, Stonehenge, 310
- Coracle of Ceridwen, 230, 237—symbol of the ark, 248—of initiation, 161—on British coins, 602
- Cordelia, the British Proserpine, 206, 401
- Cormorant, a bird of ill omen, 512
- Corn in the ear, carried by the druids, 504—corn stacks, 345
- Cornan, crescent, a mystical horse, 476
- Cornish mysteries, foreign, 432, 438—probably Phœnician, 429—introduced into Wales, ib.,—and several parts of Britain, 460
- Cornwall, seat of mystery, 426
- Cosmography of Taliesin, 45
- Covenant of Hengist, 340
- Covering stone, sacred, 122—cloth, 256
- Cow, spotted, 121, 567—emblem of the arkite goddess, 177
- Cradle of the innocent preserved, 146
- Craig pen peichen, 536
- Crair Gorsedd, name of the cromlech, 392
- Crane, 132, 161—sacred to the sun, 245
- Creation, bardic question relating to, 52
- Creirwy, 175, 205, &c.—the British Proserpine, 196—the symbolical egg, 210, 212
- Crescent, mystic horse, symbol of the sacred ship, 477—on British coins, 606
- Cresses, purifying, 220, 273
- Cromlech, various opinions respecting the, 391—ancient names of, 392—regarded as a druidical altar, 391—objections to that opinion, 392—deemed sepulchral, but not always so, 392—attached to druidical temples, 391, 397, &c.—whether it contained the cell of initiation, 391—a mystical tomb, 392—distinguished by the names of the arkite god and goddess, 396, &c.—reputed a prison, 399—sacred to Proserpine, 400, &c.—called Maen Ketti, 401—sacred to Ceres, 393—constituted the mystic cell of that goddess, 403, 408, 410—in Gower described, 394—in Nevern described, 395
- Cub of a wolf deposited by the mystical sow, 427
- Cuckoo proclaims the festival of Hu, 122, 171
- Cûdd, the ark, 171, &c.
- Cuhelyn, 7, 8, 185—son of Caw, 310
- Cul Vanawyd Pryain, a mystical character, 444
- Cuno, import of, 604
- Canobeline, a British king, 604—title of the sun, 606—a god, 630—talisman of, 613, 618
- Cursus at Stonehenge, 315, 370
- Cwch, the boat, 198—vale of, 414
- Cwn Annwn, hell-hounds, 420, 546
- Cwy, the diluvian patriarch, 138
- Cycles, marked in British temples, 302 at Stonehenge, 304
- Cylch balch Nevwy, 41, 299—byd, 266, 299—names of the druidical temples 299—Cyngrair, the same, 392
- Cymry, represented as Aborigines of Britain, 97
- Cynddelw, 11—a half pagan, 19,
- Cynhaval mab Argat, 134, 200
- Cynvavr cad Gaddug, 133
- Cynvelyn, 42—a sacred fire, 552—a god, 616
- Cyverthwch, cliff of, 427
- Cyvylichi, temple of Ceridwen in, 286

D

- Dadeni haelon, 21
- Dæmons of wanton animation, and of the flowing sea, 135
- Dales of Devwy, 138
- Dall ben, mystagogue, 426
- Dallwyr, Μυρατ, 432
- Dance of the druids, 16, 171, 172—in the orgies of Bacchus, 173, 175—sacred, 528, 530, 568, 576
- Dark receptacle, the boat of Ceridwen, 256
- Darkness of the ark commemorated, 521
- Daronwy, molester of Mona, 427
- Darter of rays, 488—of light, a sacred title, 543
- David ab Gwilym, 64
- Dawn Dovydd, Selago, 280
- Death typified in the mysteries, 231—and revival of the aspirant, 259
- Dedwydd, Ερωστης, 252
- Dœ, a sacred river, 152—worshipped, 153
- Deep water, the mystical bath, 280
- Defect of information in the chair of Glamorgan, 34
- Defence of the mystical poems, 5—of the triads, 27
- Delus, a floating island, 160.
- Deluge, British traditions of the, 95, &c.—sacred, 142—represented in British rites, 161—in what light regarded by the Britons, 226—extended to the votaries of bardism, 285—universally acknowledged, 500—memorials of the, 534—traditions of the, 542
- Demolishing of circles, 496, 513—of groves, circles, &c. 486

- Dëon, Hu, the diluvian god, 119, 121, 504, 506
 Deo Mouno Cad, 134
 Derwyddon, 6, 11, 12, 14, 21, 22
 Description of the mysteries, 231
 Design of a druidical temple, 298, &c.
 Destruction of druidical temples, 138
 Deucalion's deluge, 97
 Deus Lunus, Noah, Meen, Mcnes, Me-non, &c. 262
 Dew Danwantaree, Indian name of Noah, 228
 Dewrath Wledig, 241, 246
 Dialogue between Rowena and a Briton, 360
 Dien propitiated, 273
 Dignity of the bards, 24
 Diluvian imagery, 41—god, 117—lake, 192—mythology, 506
 Din, mighty lord of the, title of the sun, 534
 Din Breon, 6—Drei, 355
 Dinas Affaraon, 427, 435—Beirdd, 473—Cerddorion, 23—Diachor, 508—Emrys, 215, 243—Pharaon, or Emrys, 436
 Dinbych, a sacred isle, 155
 Diogenes Laertius, druidical triad recorded by, 75
 Dionusus, Noah, 258
 Διόνυς, 258, 528
 Dirge over the body of Hengist, 542
 Discipline of the probationer, 286
 Distributor, a sacred title, 247
 Divination of the druids, 44—by lots, 339, 359, 483, 532—by victims, 544
 Diviner, son of Semno, 340
 Divining magician, 42—staff, 528
 Diviaticus Aeduus, a druid, 44
 Diwyth a Gorwyth, 407
 Doctrine of the mysteries, 252, 254
 Dogmas of the chair of Glamorgan, 55, 60
 Dogs introduced in mystical exhibitions, 232, &c.—why emblematical of heathen priests, 234—of battle, warriors, 331—mystical, 419, 452, 454—of the wood or grove, 489
 Done, banks of the, 376, 383
 Door of the ark, how regarded, 231—of the ark, and arkite temples, 520
 Door-keeper of Godo, a mystical character, 199
 Dor-Marth, the British Cerberus, 234
 Dovydd, a sacred title, 272, 542
 Dragon, 16, 24, 67, 127, 562—chief, the helio-arkite god, 118—name of Hu, 121—ruler of the world, 122—afflicted by the deluge, 168—a sovereign, 279—dragon gyrciad, 133—dragons of Snowdon, 243—of Dinas Pharaon, 436—alluded to solar worship, 437
 Drawing of the mystical wear, 238
 Drink of the festival, 219—of night, 452
 Druidical documents preserved in Britain, 2—temples, round, 299
 Druidism preserved in Wales, 6—tolerated in Wales, 16—professed by the bards, 25—composed of heterogeneous principles, 86—fundamental principles of, 87—allied to the Greek and Roman superstition, 88—founded in a corruption of the patriarchal religion, 182—a mixed superstition, 291—originally arkite, afterwards helio-arkite, 412—of the bards, 430—originated in Britain, 457—how far it survived the Roman government in Britain, 462—re-imported out of Caledonia into Wales, 475, 480—outlawed, 488
 Druids, wearers of gold chains, 13—promoters of heroism, 14—of Britain, 22—the magi of Gaul and Britain, 37—druid's town in Anglesea, 399—druid stones, parish so named from certain cromlechs, ib.—prediction of, 571
 Drum, mystical, 221—Essyd, 362
 Drws porth Uffern, 518
 Drych eil Cibddar, a mystic character, 429
 Duw Celi, a title of Hu, 110
 Dwelling of the wood, sacred grove, 24
 Dwyvan and Dwyvach, 95, 105
 Dwyvavr and Dwyvach, 152, 192
 Dylan, son of the sea, 99, 194, 542—the patriarch Noah, 109, 102—wave of, 285
 Dÿrraith, a mystical character, 609, 616—rank of, 620
 Dyved, Demetia, 198
 Dyvynawl Vrych, Hengist, 376
- E
- Each triad a whole, 30
 Eagle leads the procession, 119—of Gwydien, 353—of mythology, 434—of Brynach, 462—mystical, 488—in the sky, 508—eagles' nests, 163—al-lurer, 343—eagles of Snowdon, 21—eaglet deposited by the mystical sow, 427
 Ear of corn protected, 355—on British coins, 604
 Earth, bardic questions relating to the, 52—moves in an orbit, 55—propitiated, 276—earthquakes, bardic question relating to, 51
 Ebrity, sacred in the British festivals, 119—of Seithenin, 198
 Echel with the pierced thigh, 199
 Effects of initiation, 240
 Egg, symbolical, 205, 207—of the ark,

- 267, 208, 419—solemn preparation of, 418
 Eiddilig Corr, a mystical character, 429
 Eiddin, Vortigern, 337—Eidin, 585
 Eidiol, 113, 308, 309, 313, 315—the same as Ambrosius, 309, 331—the harmonious, 369—the placid, 372—actions of, 343, 362, 364—sacrifice of, 365 gyr, the mother of Arthur, 187—the Eisame as Ceridwen, 408
 Eirin Gwion, 275
 Eiry Mynydd, 75, 80
 Election of the arch-druid, 61
 Elementary trees, 505
 Elements, nine, 53
 Eleusinian cave, antique sculpture of, 233
 Elgan, 138, 550
 Elidyr Sais, 21
 Ellyll Banaw—Gwidawl—Malen, 135
 Elmur, a name of the tauriform god, 134—
 —a sovereign bull, 200
 Elphin, 20, 204, 259—a mystical character, 238—sovereign of the bards, 246—the same as Avagddu, 246—the sun, 247, 351—honours of, 504—deliverance of, 532
 Emrys the sovereign, 242, 244—a name of the helio-arkite god, 384
 Enchantment ascribed to Hu, 120
 Englynion Misoedd, 82
 Enigat the Great, 49
 Enumeration of Vortigern's auxiliaries, 338
 Epilogue to the mysteries, 253
 Ερωπρης, what, 254
 Equality, whether a doctrine of the bards, 57, &c.—disavowed by them, 83
 Equiponderate mass—q. whether the earth or the Logan stone, 135
 Erch (bee), a mystical horse, 478
 Errith a churriith, 549
 Eseye, the arkite goddess, 114—worshipped at Stonehenge, 350
 Essyllt, spectacle, a mystical character, 439, 442, 444, 456
 Ethics, druidical, 76, &c.
 Etruscan Janus, Noah, 159
 Etymologies of Mr. Bryant, &c. 90
 Euxine, mythological tale of its overflowing, 98
 Eve of May, 576
 Exorcised spot, 277—exorcisms, 541
 External purity required, 250
 Eye of the light, 72
- F
- Faber's heathen theology, 90
 Fair family, 156
 Fame of Stonehenge, 364
 Fangs of the mystical hen, 256
 Festival of the arkite god, 170—of the tauriform god, 537
 Fire, sun worshipped in Britain by the name of, 120, 533—preserved in the druidical temples, 154, 295—by the bards, 271
 Fish, a transformation of Gwion, 229
 Flag of truce sent by Hengist, 352
 Floating islands represented the ark, 154, 158, 159, 160—sanctuary, 507, &c.
 Flood of Dylan, 102
 Flowers exhibited at the festivals, 278
 Flûr, a mystical character, 447
 Foam of the ocean, used in purification, 220
 Foreign attendants of the mystical cat, 437
 Formulary, previous to initiation, 221—
 . mystical, 250—of introduction, 287
 Fortitude inculcated by the druids, 75
 Fountains, mystical, 23, 50
 Fragment in an unknown language, 564
 Freckled intruder, Hengist, 376, 383
 Fruit-bearing tree, 23
- G
- Gallicenæ, Gwyllion, 168—priestesses of Kêd, or Ceridwen, 169
 Galltraeth, battle of, 344, 348
 Garden, sacred, 155
 Garlands of the mystics, 576
 Garwy hîr, 199, 226
 Gate of sorrow, a mystical dog, 234—of hell, 518
 Gauls consecrated their gold in a lake, 144—were initiated into Cornish mysteries, 458—espoused the gods of Cornwall, 459
 Geirionydd, 157—æthereal temple of, 566
 Genius of the ark, names of, 184—of the rainbow, 264
 Gentilism preserved some principles of the patriarchal religion, 498
 Genuineness of bardic mythology, 258
 Geographical triads of the Gauls and Britons, 28—geography of the druids, 53
 Geraint, 199—ab Erbin, 444—commander of the British fleet, 379
 German mythology, 179
 Giantess, Ceridwen, 256
 Giants vanquished by Hu, 120—antediluvian, 148—of mythology, 455
 Glain, how produced, 52, 164—an emblem of renovation, 210—glains, artificial, 111—sacred in Samothrace, 211, 212—how distinguished, 455
 Glass, sacred amongst the druids, 211—inclosure of, 522

- Glewlwyd Gavaelvawr, guardian of the sacred gate, 287
- Glyn Cwch, vale of the boat, 418 —Dallwyr, vale of the mystics, 432
- God of war, 120—of victory, Buddugre, 365—gods of the druids, what they were, 87—of the heathens, all referable to the sun, 124—deified mortals, 254—worshipped at Stonehenge, 385—represented by rude stones, 388—the same worshipped at Stonehenge and in North Britain, 468
- Godde Gwrych, a bird of ill omen, 511
- Goddess of various seeds, 186—of death, Ceridwen, 230—of the silver wheel, character and office of, 266—goddesses of paganism referred to the ark, the moon, and the earth, 178
- Godo, 199—appellative of a British temple, 324
- Gododin, 113—poetical work of Aneurin, 317—subject of, 318, 384—why obscure, 318—consists of a series of songs, 320—meaning of the term, 322, song 1. 326—how composed, 356—place of conference with Hengist, 330—name of the great sanctuary, 348—Gododin, gomynaf, 362
- Gold chains of the druids, 13—of the British nobles, 341, 368—pipes, a plant, 275—gold shield of the chief druid, 544—trinkets, 545, 547
- Goronwy, 41, 199—a mystical character, 544
- Gorthyn, Vortigern, 381
- Corwynion, imitated by Gwalchmai, 10
- Governor of the feast mounted on his horse, 375
- Grain of wheat, transformation of Gwion, 230, 235, 256—of the arkites, 257, 390, 573—grains deposited by the mystical sow, 426, 431, 433
- Grannawr, a title of Hu, 116—of the British Apollo, 372
- Grauwyn, a title of Hu, 116, 119—of Apollo, 508
- Great cathedral, Stonehenge, 303—sanctuary of the dominion, 313
- Greidiawl, a mystical character, 440
- Greyhound bitch, a transformation or symbol of Ceridwen, 229, 396
- Grey stones of the temple, 138
- Grove of Diarwya, 418—druidical, 483, &c.
- Guardian spell, 42—of the gate, 287—of the door, 520
- Gwaednerth, the British Mars, 368
- Gwair, a mystical prisoner, 404, 406—son of the great tempest, 406, 441—title of the arkite god, 479—the patriarch, 515
- Gwaith Emrys, a name of Stonehenge, 384, 402
- Gwâl y Vilast, 396, 397
- Gwalchmai, 10—a mystical character, 199
- Gwarchan Maelderw, 538, 582
- Gwarthawn, an evil principle, 48
- Gwawd Eludd, 121, 563
- Gwely Taliesin, 398
- Gwenddolen, a mystical character, 487
- Gwenddoleu, who, 463—family of, 464—cannibal birds of, 463—a bull, 465—chief of the northern princes, 466—pillar of bardic lore, ib.—sacred fire of, 476
- Gwenddydd Wen, fair lady of day, 468
- Gwenhwyvar, the ark, 187
- Gwgan Lawgadarn, a mystical personage, 393
- Gwin a Bragawd, 219
- Gwion the Little, 213, 229, 275
- Gwlad yr Hûd, 198
- Gwlith, gwllith Eryr, 274
- Gwlydd, Samolus, 274
- Gwrawl, Aurelius, 376
- Gwreang, the herald, 213
- Gwrgi Garlwyd, a mystical cannibal, 454, 463, 474, 477
- Gwrtheyrn Gwynedd, 340
- Gwrthmwl the sovereign, 478
- Gwrvorwyn, 197, 205
- Gwyddno Garanhir, 161—the same as Seithenin, 244—the same as Tegid, 251—office and character of, 250—poems of, 249—wear of, 238—mystical father of Ambrosius, 346
- Gwydion, son of Don, Hermes, 118, 204, 263, 553, 429, 504, 541—contends with the birds of wrath, 266
- Gwylan, the sea-mew, 110
- Gwyllion predict the deluge, 157—what they were, 166, 606—Gallicenæ, 168, 223—song of, 566
- Gwyllionwy, mystic river, 41
- Gwyn ab Nudd, the Pluto of the Britons, 206—lord of the lower regions, represented in the mysteries, 288, 466—contends with Gwyddno, 249
- Gwynedd, title of Vortigern, 340
- Gwynvardd Brecheiniog, 140—Dyvcd, 414
- Gwythaint, birds of wrath, 267
- Gyvylchi, temple of Ceres in, 299, 387, 436

H

Haeardor, iron door, name of the ark and arkite temple, 120, 560

- Haid, swarm, a mystical horse, 478
- Hall of Ceridwen, 255, 390—of the mysterious god, 286—of mystery, 458
- Hanes Taliesin, 186—Chap. ii. 213—Chap. iii. 229—Chap. iv. 238
- Harbour of life, 162, 250
- Hare, a transformation of Gwion, 229.
- Havgan summershine, a mystical character, 420
- Hawk of may, 199—transformation of Ceridwen, 235
- Headband of the sacred ox, 138
- Heathen sanctuaries appropriated to christian worship, 140
- Heathenism, wherein criminal, 496
- Hebraic origin of bardic lore, 94
- Heifer a symbol of the ark, 131, 425
- Heilyn, a name of the solar divinity, 162—impeller of the sky, 250, 261—the feeder, 261, 528
- Helanus, the lunar divinity, 145
- Helio-arkite god, a comprehensive character, 123, 126—identified with a bull, 135—superstition, 90
- Heliodorus, flat stone of, 475
- Hên Velen, name of a British temple, 502
- Hen, symbol of Ceridwen, 205, 230—sacred amongst the Britons, 236—with red fangs and a divided crest, 259, 574
- Hengist, described by Cuhelyn, 313—by Aneurin, 327—freckled, 359—death of, 352—sarcastic elegy upon the death of, 381
- Hên Wen, old lady, a mystical sow, 426—the great mother, 430
- Herald of peace, 60—of mysteries, 214—privilege of the mystical, 440
- Hercules, history of, helio-arkite, 416
- Herds of the roaring beli, 352—master of the fair, 549
- Hëwr Eirian, splendid mover, title of the sun, 119, 509
- Hierophant attended by three priests, 288
- High stones, sacred, 581
- Hill of Aren, 193
- Hippa, mare, the arkite goddess, 258, 443, 445—Hippas, horse, an arkite symbol, 442
- History of Taliesin, a mythological tale, 186
- Hodain, a mystical dog, 452
- Hoianau, a poem of Merddin, in a northern dialect, 469, 470, 490
- Holme, sacred, 172
oly sanctuary, 507, &c.
- Honours of the ancient bards, 14
- Horn of the lustrator, 171, 530—of the herald, 419—horns carried in procession, 172
- Horse, emblem of a ship, 252, 443, 475, 478, 599—of Elphin, the bardic chair, 239—of Gwydduo, 214, 251—mystical, 544—mythological, 476—of the sun, 528, 534—symbolical, 594—on the British coins, 593—image of Kêd or Ceridwen, 595, 601—figure of, abridged, 595—parts of, described, 596—parts of, symbolical, 597
- Horses, magical, 610, 614
- House, shrine of the patriarch, 171—of glass, a sacred ship, 212, 522
- Howel, Dda, triads of, 29—of Llandin-gad, 64
- Hu, patriarch and god of the bards, 24—Gadarn, 95—the deified patriarch, 106—how described in the triads, 106—how described by Iolo Goch, 108—Emperor of land and seas, 180—the life or parent of all, 108—a husbandman, after the deluge, 109—deified and worshipped, 109—the greatest god 110—worshipped in conjunction with the sun, ib.—presided in the ark, and circle of the world, 113, 169—was called Nöe, 114—the lord of the British Isle, 115—the god of Mona, 118, 554—the father of mankind, 120—the winged, 121—the sovereign of Heaven, 121—the Bacchus of the Britons, 126, 289—a bull, 136, 137, 139—a benefactor, 428—a patriarch and god, 495—sacred isle of, 479—titles of, 461
- Huan, name of Hu, the sun, 115
- Hudlath, magic wand, 41—hudwydd, the same, 268
- Huge stones of the temple, 171—sacred to Ceres, 389
- Human sacrifices, 463, 466
- Hunt, mystical, 229, 418
- Husbandry taught by Hu, or Noah, 109
- Hwch, sow, the British Ceres, 414
- Hydranus, the mystical baptist, 214, 220—symbolized by an otter, 235
- Hygre, 143
- Hymn to Bacchus, 127—to the sun, 367—chanting of, 509
- Hyperborean Apollo, temple of, at Stonehenge, 303, 528
- Hywel Voel, 23—son of Owen, 283, 301
I, J.
- Janus, 199, 201
- Icolmkil, 164
- Idai Dactyli, 216
- Identity of heathen gods, 125—goddesses, 178—mythological persons, 203
- Images of British gods, 388
- Imitation of Taliesin, 15
- Impeller of the sky, 167
- Imprisonment of the aspirant, 259—of

- Aneurin, 356—of Gwair, 408— of the diluvian patriarch, 515, 516
 Inauguration of Arthur, 527
 Incantation, 42—of Cynvelyn, 63
 Incircled mount, guarded by mystical characters, 288
 Incloser of flame, 199
 Inclosure with the strong door, the ark, 226
 Indian tradition of the deluge, 226, &c.
 Ingredients of the mystical cauldron, 218, 220, 276
 Innocence inculcated by the druids, 75
 Inundation, mystical, 506
 Insigne druidis, 208
 Interpolation of mystical poems, 269
 Iolo Goch, 108
 Iona, probably the seat of the northern druids, 479
 Iôr, a sacred title, 313, 315—Avagddu, 316
 Iris, 204—represented as a lady, 423—see rainbow
 Island, sacred, 120—symbol of the ark, and druidical sanctuary, 154—of the mount of debarkation, 161—of Hu, 164—sacred to Bacchus, 173—of the cow, 177—of German mythology, 179—with the strong door, 165, 167, 520— island temple, 160— islands venerated by the ancients, 161—see floating
 Islets, sanctuaries of the Gauls, 144—of Scilly, 165
 Jurisprudence of the druids, 74
 Just Ones, arkites, 118, 557
 Ivy branch, 122, 574
 K
 Karn brè, a station of the druids, 591— coins found there, 591—description of, 593
 Kêd, a title of Ceridwen, 8, 119—the ceto of antiquity, 114, 122—the daughter of the patriarch, 122, 176, 571—the ship of the patriarch, 176— preserves corn at the deluge, 176— invests Taliesin with the sovereignty of Britain, 122—rules the British tribes, 176—the British Ceres, 368, 372, 402—the arkite goddess, 176, 432—chief priests of, 506—vessel of, 511
 Kedawl, the arkite goddess, 249
 Kedig, the arkite goddess, 532
 Kedwidedd, 266
 Kedwy and the boat, 549
 Kernos, a small chest, carried by the aspirants, 221
 Ketti, stone of, 402
 Kibuo Ked, 368
 King Lear, 206
 Kine of the British Ceres, 530
 Kist Vaen, 394
 Kitten deposited by the mystical sow, 427
 Knight of the inclosure, 313—knights of Eiddin, 338
 Kùd, cell of, under a flat stone, 408— prison of, 404
 Koves, dogs, symbols of heathen gods, and their priests, 234
 Kyd, the vessel of the patriarch, 122, 568
 Kykeon, the liquor of the festival, 221
 L
 Lacus Cespitis, 157—Tegeius, 191
 Ladon, Latona, 526
 Lady of the silver wheel, 205—mystical, 423
 Lake of Llion, 95, 226—sacred, 119, 171, 508—symbol of the deluge, 142—of adoration, 143—of consecration, 143—of the grove of Iôr, 143—of Thoulouse, 144—sacred to the moon, 145—of Lomond, 158, 163—of Vadimon, 158—of Buto, 159—of German mythology, 179—containing the arkite gods, 191—of the Arenees, 195
 Lakes, British mythology of, 142—sacred amongst the continental Celtæ, 144—swallowed up cities, 145—of Snowdon, 157—inhabited by the Gwylion, 157
 Lampon, by Trahaearn, 66
 Land of mystery, 198
 Landing place of the bards, 251—stone, 162
 Language of the mysteries, 90—of the chair, a mystical character, 199
 Law, of the inclosure, 200—of Ceridwen, 256, 265—of mysteries, 511—laws of Howel, 74
 Leader of the din, 365, 534
 Leaves of plants discriminated, 51
 Legends of the British coins, 607
 Levelling principles, 56, &c.
 Libation of honey, 276—of wine, 279
 Liberation of elphin, 247
 Liberty and equality, 56
 Lights, or torches of Ceridwen, 261
 Lion, title of the sun, 116, 127, 364
 Little song of the world, 54
 Living ox, emblem of Hu, 139—herd, 172
 Llad, the arkite goddess, 175—274
 Llan, the sacred ship, 257—dingad, 67
 Llech, Titleu, 344—Lenca, battle of, 359—yr ast, a cromlech, 397—y gowres, 398—Vaelwy, 512
 Llen gél, veil of mystery, 198, 417—Carthen, 256—lliw ehog, 510
 Lleveni, a sacred river, 151
 Llevoed, a moral bard of the 10th century, 83

- Llion, the ancient, a mystical character, 415, 417
- Llogell Byd, name of the circular temple, 393
- Lloanio Llonwen, 427
- Lludd llaw Eraint, 206
- Llwch Llawinawg, 288
- Llyn Llion, diluvian lake, 142, 143—
Llyn Creini, Urddyn, Gwyddior, 143
—Savaddan, 146, 151—Tegid, 152
—y Dywarchen, 157—ab Erbin, 508
- Llyr, a mystical name, 206—Llediaith, 404, 405—sons of, 501
- Llys Ceridwen, 255
- Llywarch, ab Llywelyn, 19—Hên, 31, 60, 357
- Llywy, the British Proserpine, 175, 196, 205, 342, 371—daughter of Ceridwen, sister of the aspirant, 285—venerated in the temple of Gyvylchi, 286—in Mona, 559—steeds and shields of, 372
- Local traditions of the deluge, 147, 148
- Locality of ancient tradition, 97*
- Lofty one, Hu, 141
- Lord of thunder, 198—of the water, 199
- Lore of the druids, preserved in Wales, 9
—professed by Taliesin, 117, 279—delivered in Hebrew, 573—of the deluge, 545
- Lots, magical, 43—Bardic, 490, 532
- Lustration, diluvian, 142, 226
- M
- Mab Eilydd, 334
- Mabgyvre, elements of instruction, 49, 100
- Mabinogian, 147, 155—how far useful, 459, 514
- Mabon, a mystical character, 287, 288
- Maceration and sprinkling, 279
- Madawc, 348—Dwygraig, 24—mab Brwyn, 247
- Madien, Bonus Janus, Seithenin, 116, 367
- Maelgwn, destroys the temple of the druids, 137—confines Elphin, 246—reprobated, 504—a persecutor of the druids, 549
- Maelwy, flat stone, of, 513
- Maenarch, stone of, 393
- Maen Ketti, 401
- Maen Llog, name of the cromlech, 392
- Maes Beli, battle of, 352
- Magic of the druids and bards, 37—how to be understood, 39—wand, 41, 268, 555—spells, 42—flag or standard, 582, &c.—figure of a horse, impressed upon gold and silver, 610—horse upon the old coins, 614, &c.—horse of Malen, 617
- Magna Mater, 165, 175
- Malen, Minerva, 135
- Manawydan and Pryderi, 295—Manawydan, son of Llyr, 188
- Mangling dwarf, a mystical character, 367
- Manon, a sacred title, 584
- March, horse, a mystical character, 439
—prince of Cornwall, 442—master of ships, 444
- Mare, hippa, a transformation of Ceres, 258, 445—symbol of the ark, 425
- Marwnad, Dylan, 102—Aeddon, 553
- Massacre at Stonehenge, 306, 321, 363, 579—how occasioned, 348
- Master of song, an office claimed by the druidical line, 13—of the ox-herd, 138
- Math, son of Mathonwy, a mystical character, 429, 541—and Eunydd, sorcerers, 268, 554
- Matholwch, form of worship, a mystical king of Ireland, 452
- Maurice, remarks of Mr., upon Stonehenge, 303
- Maurigasima, 149
- Maxims, druidical, in the form of triads, 28
- May day, 163—festival of, 369—eve, 121—a sacred anniversary, 238, 241, 333—celebrators of, 585—swordsmen of, 569
- Meichiad, swineherd, a mystical title, 414
- Meini, Hirion, a circular temple, 398—Kyvrivol, ib.
- Meirig, a mystical personage, 414
- Melissæ, the muses, arkite priestesses, 224
- Melyn Gwan wyn, a sacred ox, 132
- Melyngan, a sacred horse, 544
- Memorials of the bards, 14—of the deluge, in ancient Britain, 95
- Menn, Noah, 228—a mystical character, 423, 441
- Menw, or Menyw, 13—Menwed, blessed ones, 576
- Menwaed, a mystagogue, 427
- Menwyd, Noah, 176, 568
- Merddin, 2, 21—a druid, 7—teacher of druidism, 26—a pretended prophet, 21, 39—a warrior, 62—Vardd, 164—the Caledonian, 453, 465, 466—supreme judge of the north, 467—wore the gold collar, 487—a mystical swineherd—is persecuted, 469—retires into the Caledonian forest, 470—having opposed the introduction of christianity, 472—interpolated, and why, 468, 470—apple trees of, 480—madness of, counterfeited, 481

- Merin, a sacred title, 116—son of Morien, 367
- Merit of the aspirant, how ascertained, 251
- Merlin, no prophet nor conjuror, 38
- Mervyn Gwawdrydd, 80
- Metre of the triplets obsolete, 80
- Meugant, 6—character of, 58
- Mic Dinbych, a mystical poem, 507
- Mighty bear, title of Gwyddno, 246
- Military devices on the British coins, 609
- Milk offered by the bards, 503
- Minawc ap Llen, Noah, 260, 261
- Minyæ, Noachidæ, 148—arkites, 262—Minyas, 147
- Misseltoe, 280—several names of, 281
- Moch, swine, mystical, 414
- Modes of mysticism, 428
- Mohyn Cad, 134
- Molesters of Mona, 427
- Mona, 503, 554—the island of Hu, 117—named from a cow, 177
- Monks reproached by Taliesin, 525
- Moon, worshipped in conjunction with the ark, 125, 280—emblem of Kêd or Ceridwen, 176, 284—priests of, 277
- Moral philosophy of the druids, 74—instructions of the bards, 75—stanzas, 80
- Morda, ruler of the sea, 213
- Moriën, Janus Marinus, 115, 349, 350, 354, 361—preserved the sacred fire, 114—founded the temple of Stonehenge, 115, 384
- Morvran ap Tegid, 189, 241—character of, 202
- Most ancient, powerful, sacred titles, 354
- Mother of mankind, the ark, 184
- Mount Baris, 207—of debarkation, 161, 192—of the assemblies, 402
- Mountain of Fuawn, the visible world, 49—of Mynnau, 47—mountain chief, Vortigern, 332, 366, 368
- Mundane circle, 121—rampart, the temple of Hu, 122, 568—egg, 207—represented at Stonehenge, 304
- Mûr Iôr, Stonehenge, 310
- Murgreid, a sacred title, 346
- Muses, arkite priestesses, 223, &c.
- Mydnaw, ship-bearer, a mystical character, 167, 448
- Mynawg, 350—Mynweir, 529
- Myrrh and aloes, used in the festivals of the druids, 273
- Mysteries of the Cabiri, 90—of the Gentiles, diluvian, memorials, 183, 255—greater and less, 237, represented the adventures of the patriarch, 248—consisted of scenical or symbolical representations, 257—of Ceres, celebrated in Wales, in the 12th century 232
- Mystical poems, Mr. Turner's opinion of, 4—the best documents of British druidism, 26—goddess, 18—cauldron, 40—ingredients of, 282—oracle, 162—river, 235—grove, 285—process, 240—personages of a British Ogdoad, 475—formation of the arch druid, 540
- Mythological tales, 31—bulls and oxen, 130
- Mythology of the Britons, genuine and ancient, 112
- N.
- Nadredd, druids, 210
- Names, common to the god and his votaries, 134—of the Dee, 152—borrowed from mythology, 194—of the ark, 510
- Natural philosophy of the druids, 44, 45
- Nâv, the diluvian patriarch, 105, 444
- Naw, a ship, 245, 535—Naw Morwyn, 517
- Neivion, Neptune, 105
- Nêr, god of the ocean, 19—Nereus, 163—the deluge, 539
- Nevydd Nav Neivion, 95, 105
- Night, bardic questions relating to, 51—nightly solemnity, 273
- Nine damsels of British mythology, 166, 219, 223, 518—of Egypt, 225—nine maids, monument so called, 166
- Noah, worshipped with the sun, 90—the great god of the druids, 181—how represented in mythology, 107—truth of his religion virtually acknowledged, 500
- Nocturnal mysteries, 72, 183
- Nûe, name of Hu, 114—of the arkite god, worshipped at Stonehenge, 350
- Northern druids visited by the South Britons, 476
- Number, sacred, 79, 432—potent, 528—of the British nobles who were slain, 341
- O
- Oak, symbol of Taronwy, 299—sacred, 539
- Oar, implement of Ceridwen, 229, 232
- Oath of the initiated, 119—of admission, 287, &c.
- Obscene language disallowed in British mysteries, 285
- Obscurity of the chair of Glamorgan, 34
- Octa, lampoon addressed to, 381
- Oeth ag Anoeth, 404, 406, 515
- Offering of wheat, 273—of new milk, dew and acorns, 503
- Office of Taliesin, 271

- Ogdoad of Taliesin, 94—arkites, 121—of the druids, 475, 564—inclosed in the ark, 517
- Ogyrven, 502—Amhad, 8, 186, 432
- Oian a phorchellan, 469, 484
- Old lady, title of the British Ceres, 426
- Olwen produced trefoils, 448, 465
- Omen sticks, 43, 453, 490—fire, 376, 383
- Oracle of a Gaulish deity, 168
- Orchard, mystical, 453—of Merddin, allegorical, 481
- Orgies of the British Bacchus, 172
- Otter bitch, a transformation of Ceridwen, 320
- Outlawry of druidism, 488
- Ovum Anguinum, 18, 208—carried in procession, 172
- Owen Cyveiliawg, 14—an ancient bard slain at Stonehenge, 327, 371
- Ox stationed before the lake, 119, 508—emblem of the ark, revered as a deity, 130—a British emblem of Noah, 133—of German mythology, 179—of the ship, 194—brindled, 523—stall of the, 120—oxen of Hu, 95, 128—seen in a thunder-storm, 111—roared in thunder, and blazed in lightning, 137—drew the sacred car of the patriarch,
141—ox-pen of the bards, 136, 535
- P
- Paganism similar, in some points, to the Jewish religion, and why, 498, &c.
- Pair, Prydain, 17—Awen, 21, 213—a cauldron, figuratively expressing the druidical system, 217, 218—Pumwydd, 218—Pen Anuwn, 517—Ogyrven, 529—meaning of, 219
- Paluc, sons of, 427—cat of Mona, 437
- Paradise of the druids in the southern hemisphere, 53
- Παρος, the cell of initiation, 391
- Path of Granwyn, 508
- Patriarch, received divine honours, 105
—was forewarned of the deluge, 149
- Patrick's causeway, 162
- Peace of the plough, 70
- Pearls round the mystic cauldron, 219
- Pedigree, mystical, 405, 414, 464
- Pelagius, a half pagan, 387
- Pemble meer, 152, 189, 191
- Penance of the aspirants, 255
- Penarwen, a mystical female, 444
- Pendaran Dyved, 198, 414, 417
- Pendevig mawr, a sacred title, 525
- Penllyn, residence of Tegid Voel, 189
- People, condition of under the druids, 58
- Peril of violating the mystic laws, 288
- Perpetual fire, 215, 362
- Persecution of the druids, 485, 549—of the Sabian divinities, 495
- Pestilential wind, 226
- Phallus, 539
- Pharaon, British gods, 215, 243, 584—higher powers, 435
- Pheryllt, priests of the Cabiri, 215, 216,
435, 546—had a seminary at Oxford,
215—books of, 213
- Phlegyæ, 147—Phlegyan Isle destroyed, 148
- Phœnician rite recorded in the Bible,
180
- Phoroneus compared with Hu, 107
- Physiology of the druids and bards, 44
- Piece of gold, a credential of the druids, 545, 593
- Piercing or cutting the thigh, 170
- Piety inculcated by the druids, 75
- Pig deposited by the mystical sow, 427
- Pillars of the twelve signs, 298—attached to the circular temples, 387
- Planetary hours observed by the bards,
40, 213, 238
- Pledge of faith towards the clergy, 70—pledges mutually communicated, 279
- Plemochœ, a mystical vase, 222
- Plot of Hengist, 328, 358
- Plurality of gods maintained by the druids, 88
- Pluto of Britain, 206
- Poetry of Taliesin, mythological, 513
- Poets multiplied the gods of the gentiles, 124
- Points of sprigs broken, 359—of trees,
472—of trees of purposes, 278
- Poison of the mystic cauldron, 214—of the air, 555
- Pole of the wear, a phallic symbol, 238, 472
- Politics of the chair of Glamorgan, 55—of the bards, ib. &c.
- Polytheism, origin of, 124
- Pontifical character of Taliesin, 272
- Porchellan, little pig, a mystical title, 414
- Portlawr Godo, 199
- Precinct of Iôr, 313
- Predictions of the druids, 6, 7
- Pre-eminence of authority supported by the druids, 57
- Preiddeu Annwn, 218, 406, 513, 514
- Preu pur aur, misseltoe, 280
- Preservation of the patriarch commemorated, 151
- Preserver, Ceridwen, 266—preservers, the Cabiri of Britain, 509
- Presidency of Ceridwen, 265—presiding bard, 200
- Priest of Aedd, lives and dies alternately, 122—of the ship, 161, 245
- Priests of Ceridwen, ancient, 188—of the moon, 277—assumed the names of their

- gods, 216—were called dogs, 419—priestesses of Bacchus, 173
 Primary oxen of mythology, 132
 Primitive bards, 20—religion of the Cymry, 412—primitives of mythological language, 92
 Primroses exhibited at the festival, 278
 Principles of Celtic and Greek superstition, the same, 89—of the author, founded in British documents, 94
 Prisoners, mystical, 404—of words, 488
 Privacy of the druids, 72
 Privilege of the bardic branch, 371
 Procession, sacred, 119—of the arkite god, 172—of the druids, 508
 Proclamation, bardic, 136, 537
 Profligacy of mankind punished by the deluge, 102, 104, 149
 Progeny of Hu, 137
 Promontories sacred to diluvian rites, 161
 Prophecy communicated by the mystic water, 214—prophetic maids, 167
 Proprietor of Britain, 118—of Heaven and earth, 507—proprietor, 524—titles of Hu, 461
 Proscription of British nobles by Vortigern, 342
 Proserpine worshipped in Britain, 89—of the druids, 205—Proserpinæ Limen, 232
 Prospectus of druidical theology, 86
 Prototype, son of the ark, 134, 200
 Proud mare, symbol of Ceridwen, 256
 Prydain, name of Hu, 121—son of Aedd,
 243, 436
 Pryderi, a mystical swineherd, 414—names of, 415
 Prydwen, 515, 517
 Publicity of bardic meetings, 72
 Punishment of a disorderly votary, 518,
 519
 Pur of the east, Jupiter, 416
 Pure man, formed in the mystic hall, 255
 Purifying cauldron, 219—fire, 369
 Pwyll, the arkite, 198—chief of Annwn, 414, 415—tale of his adventures, 418—transformed, assumes the government of the deep, 421—and Pryderi, 516
 Pyr of the east, a mystical personage,
 415
- Q
- Quadrangular caer, 165—area, 313, 315
 —inclosure, 518, 520
 Quagmire of hell, 122, 571
 Questiones druidicæ, 49
- R
- Raft, symbol of the ark, 150—sacred,
 155, 160
 Rainbow, 203, 205, 266—the girdle of 'Hu, 120, 559—obtained by Gwyddno, 251—pursuit of, 423
 Ramus aureus, 280
 Rape of Proserpine, 206
 Raven of the sea, 189—of Noah, 202—slays the bull, 172
 Re-animation, place of, the mystic cell,
 537
 Reaper, the diluvian patriarch, or his priest, 122, 259
 Recapitulation, 85, 180, 289, 492
 Red book, 33—bony giant, 429—dragon,
 584
 Regeneration, mystical, 236
 Rehearsal of ancient lore, 509
 Reign of serenity, 279
 Religion of Hu opposed to that of Christ,
 109
 Remarks on British mythology, 182
 Remunerator, a title of Hu, 117
 Renovation by the mystic cauldron, 218
 Repository of mystery, 537
 Republican principles, 60
 Rhëen rym awyr, 260
 Rheiddin, the radiant, title of the sun,
 365
 Rheuydd, seat of the northern druids,
 478
 Rhewys, Ceridwen, 256
 Rhuddlwm Gawr, a mystical character,
 429
 Rhuvawn Bevyr, 204, 247, 248—a sacred title, 349. See Elphin
 Rhwyv Trydar, 534
 Rhyderch, the liberal, champion of the faith, 470—country and family of, 472
 —persecutes the druids, 487
 Rhyvoniawg, the place of Vortigern's retreat, 380
 Ring, mystical, 450, 456—rings and balls on British coins, 600, 605
 Rites of the Britons, 85, &c. 561—of the druids, similar to those of Samothrace,
 89—of Bacchus, celebrated in Britain,
 131—of the British Bacchus, described by an eye witness, 172, 576—of the Bacchus of Greece, 173—of druidism, restrained by Roman laws, 283
 River of spectres, or the Gwyllion, 41—divine, 152—of the mysteries, 235—rivers worshipped by the druids, 143 —sacred to the diluvian patriarch, 151
 Roaring Beli, herds of, 136
 Robes of the druids, 14—green, of the ovate, 510
 Rock, sacred, 161—to arkite rites, 163
 —of the supreme proprietor, 537, 539
 Rod of the bard, 363—of Moses, a poem,
 427—rods broken, 619

- Romance of Sir Tristrem, mythological, 459
- Rowena contrives the death of Vortimer, 337, 344—Rowena and Vortigern, 358
- Rude stone pillars, 300
- Rueful steed, 251
- Ruler of the deep, title of Hu, 119—cauldron of, 219—ruler of the sea, 122—of the mount, 266
- S
- Sabian idolatry blended with arkite superstition, 90—adventitious in Britain, 181—of the druids, 492
- Sacred fire, 476, 552—preserved in druidical temples, 114—at Stonehenge, 304, 345, 349, 362—grove of the Germans, 179—isle, emblems of the ark, 161, 168—lake, 158—ox, stationed before the lake, 171—oxen employed in British rites, 129—rivers, 152—rock, 162—rocks or petrae in Loch Lomond, 163—terms of the bards, 93
- Sacrifice on the banks of lakes, 145—to the deep, 251, 252—carried round the omen fire, 376, 383—sacrificer, name of the diluvian patriarch, 121
- Saidi, 199—name of the patriarch, 197
- Samolus, a sacred plant, 274
- Samothracian rites in Britain, 89—tradition of the deluge, 98
- Sanctuary of the bards, 17, 19—of initiation, 255—of Ceridwen and Llywy, 301
- Sarcastic elegy upon Hengist, 381
- Saturn, Noah, 197, 201—Saturnalia, ib.
- Saxon auxiliaries of Vortigern, 338—Saxons reproachfully described, 348—involved in flames, 350
- Schism of the chair of Glamorgan, 33
- Sculpture of Ceres and Proserpine, 298—mystical, 458
- Sea, how divided, 53—overwhelms the land, 198—represented the deluge, 248—of Dylan, 256—sea-drifted wolves, Saxons, 328—sea-mew, mystical, 510, 544
- Season of serenity, 489
- Seat of presidency, 422
- Seaxes, Saxon daggers, 330, 339, 374
- Segyrfulg, a sacred plant, 277
- Seissyll, a descendant of the druids, 12
- Seithenin Saidi, 417—son of Seithin Saidi, 198—the drunkard, 242—Seithin Saidi, 197, 324—king of Dyved, 242, 243
- Seithwedd Saidi, 197
- Selago, a sacred plant, 280
- Seminary of druids in the north, 462
- Semno, father of the diviner, 340
- Sena, sacred island, 168
- Senate of twelve gods, 298
- Seneschal of the mead feast, 358
- Sëon, a sacred island, 118—with the strong door or barrier, 167, 553—priestesses so called, 167—inhabiting Sena, 168—devoted to Bacchus, 169—Caer Seon, 546, 547
- Serpent, the same as Hu, 116—emblem of the sun, 131, 367—symbolical, 208, 210, 536—serpent's egg, 208—serpents drew the car of Ceridwen, 186
- Sessions of the druids, 72
- Seven score and seven, a mystic number, 524
- Severn boar, 143
- Severus, a planet, 53
- Shield struck by ancient warriors, 327—shields excluded from the conference with Hengist, 328, 375—split into lath, 579
- Ship of Nevydd, 95—of Dylan, 100, 542—of the earth, 231—of Janus, 201—of initiation, called Llan, 257—symbol of Ceridwen, 256—represented as a horse, 475, 478—as a sow, 430, 431—sacred symbol of the ark, 431
- Shrine of Agruerns, 142—of Hu, drawn by oxen, 139—of the patriarch, 142—drawn forth, 171—of the arkite goddess, drawn by cows, 179
- Shout, mystical, 539
- Σιδῆ, the arkite goddess, 202, 292, 557
- Signs of the zodiac, the grand assembly of twelve gods, 298
- Silence observed by the aspirant, 422
- Sir Tristram, 439—story of, 446
- Sky, name of the open temple, 508—skies, seven, 53
- Slaughter, the mother of spoliation, 365
- Sleep, bardic question upon, 50
- Smoke, bardic question upon, 50—smoky recess of probation, 259
- Snow of the mountain, 80
- Snowdon, a landing-place of the diluvians, 243
- Solar superstition at Stonehenge, 305—worship, 457
- Son of the Creator represented in the mysteries, 287—of partition, Vortigern, 329—sons of harmony, bards, 334
- Song of Cuhelyn, 310
- Soors procure the water of immortality, 227
- Sorcerers, 268—produce a sudden shower, 266

- Sortilege, 43, 453—rite of, 532
 Soul, bardic question upon, 51
 Source of energy, a sacred title, 115, 354
 Sovereign of the power of the air, 261
 Sovereignty of Britain conferred upon the chief druid, 119, 506
 Sow, sacred to Ceres, 413—symbol of the ark, 426—tale of the mystical, 426—related to the history of a ship, 430
 Sparrow-hawk, a transformation of Ceridwen, 230
 Speech of Hengist, 314 .
 Spheres, seven, 53
 Splendid mover, title of the sun, 119, 509
 Spoils of the deep, a mystical poem, 137, 513
 Sprigs, mystical, 472, 484, 511, 537—broken into tallies or lots, 532—authority of, 487
 Sprinkling, a sacred rite of purification, 219, 220
 Sprites of the gloom, 42
 Staff of Janus, 201
 Stall of the cow, 122, 177, 568—of the ox, 535
 Stanzas of the months, 82
 Steed with illustrious trappings, 264—of the ruler of the sea, 284—steeds, ships, 569
 Stone, cell, of the sacred fire, 345—pillars, 360—ark, 393
 Stonehenge, a great druidical temple, 303, 385—described by Diodorus, 303—celebrated by British writers, 306—described by Cuhelyn, 313—by Aneurin, 349, 364, 384—the great stone fence of the common sanctuary, 350—not older than the introduction of helio-arkite superstition, 384—why selected for the place of conference with Hengist, 385—called Hen Velen, Old Belennium, 502
 Story of Gwyddno, mythological, 241—of Llyn Savaddan, 146—of Pwyll, 418
 Strata of the earth, bardic question upon, 52
 Stream of life, 152
 Studded circle on the sacred shield, 592—on the British coins, 600
 Styx, an emblem of the flood, 153
 Subject of the Gododin, 321
 Submersion of cities, 145—of islands, 148, 149—of Cantre'r Gwaelod, 242
 Sues, swine, a title of heathen priests, 413
 Suffocation of the aspirant, 256
 Summershine, a mystic character, 420—slain, 422
 Sun worshipped in conjunction with Noah, 125—titles of, 336
 Supreme Being acknowledged by the bards, 496, 502, 506, 507, 515, 526—cause, declared in the mysteries, 254—mount of the bards, 374—proprietor, a title of Hu, 120, 136, 537
 Swelling sea of knights, 361
 Swine, mystical, 414, 470—swineherds of mythology, 413, 439, 460, 469
 Sword, when to be unsheathed, 64, 456—carried in procession, 172—of the chief druid, 542
 Symbol of the egg, 205—of the deluge, 250—symbolical imagery, 131—death, 163
 Syw, a diviner, 272, 467—sywed Ced, 505—Sywedydd, 271, 272
- T
- Tair Orian, three hymns, 505
 Tale of the sacred oxen, 139—of a lake in Brecknockshire, 155—of Loch Lomond, 163
 Taliesin, 2, 200—poems of, mythological, 4—genuine, 9—publisher of bardic lore, 18, 20—taught druidism, 26—professed natural philosophy, 52—contemplated battles, 62—mythology of, druidical, 181—a mystical infant, 239—a title of the sun, 296—was present in various ages, 505—poetry of, characterized by Mr. Turner, 513
 Talisman of Cunobeline, 613, 618
 Tallies, 43, 482
 Taronwy, a tree divinity, 41
 Tarvos Trigaranus, 132
 Tauriform god, 127—rites of, 170
 Tay, druids baptized in the, 473
 Teganwy, place of a bardic meeting, 504
 Tegid Voel, 189—the Saturn of the Britons, 195—known by various names, 198, 199—the patriarch, 200—Seithwedd Saidi, 197—Gwyddno, 241
 Teithan, Tydain, Titan, the sun, 114, 115
 Tempest of fire, 226
 Temples of the druids, 291
 Ternary arrangements of the Celtæ, 28
 Test of the British bards, 37
 Testimonies in favour of the mystic bards, 6
 Teyrn On, Apollo, 120, 526
 Thanet, residence of Hengist, 379
 Theology of the Britons, 85, &c.—of the druids, recorded by Cæsar, 88
 Thigh pierced or cut, 199, 505, 537, 544
 Third rank assigned to the solar divinity, 526
 Three fountains, 47, 48—ministers, 287—hymns round the fire, 295—stones erect, 300, 302—cranes, 245

- Thrice born, 240, 253, 258
 Titaresius, a sacred stream, 158
 Titles of the British gods, 350—of Ceridwen, 403
 Token of the egg, 189—of life, 190
 Topography of a temple of Ceres, 299
 Tops of the birch and oak, 539
 Torches of Ceridwen, 261—of the druids, 277
 Traditions of the Britons, where preserved, 31—of the deluge, 95—of the oxen of Hu, 129—of the changes of druidism, 411—tradition not always consistent, 98
 Trahearn Brydydd Mawr, 32—age and character of, 65—disgraced, 69—outlawed, 70—curious poem of, 67
 Transformations, mystical, 229—of Taliesin, 573
 Transmigration, 15
 Trefoil, a sacred plant, 448—on British coins, 601, 602
 Triads, ancient, 3—mythological, 27—mentioned by Aneurin and Taliesin, 29—derived from ancient bardic lore, 30—systematical, 200
 Triplets, moral, 75—derived from the school of the druids, 79
 Trystan, a mystical personage, 439, 440
 Tumulus of the cgress, 193
 Twice born, 258
 Twrch, boar, a mystical title, 414—
 Trwyth, 614
 Ty Gwydrin, 212
 Tydain Tad Awen, Apollo, 193, 526
 Tylwyth Têg, the British fairies, 156
 U
 Un Daw Uchaf, 103
 Uncovered temples, 305
 Unity of God, 87, 103
 Unspotted weapon of the bard, 326
 Universal peace, 60
 Urien of Reged, 59, 502
 Uthyr Bendragon, 120, 187, 429, 557
 Utter darkness, 190, 203
 V
 Vale of the beaver, scene of a mystical conflict, 266
 Vadimon, or Vandimon, Janus, Noah, 158, 159
 Veil of the temple, 171, 562—of the mystical lots, 483, 489
 Venedotian, Vortigern, 361
 Vervain, use of, 43—a sacred plant, 220—exhibited in the festival, 273—used in casting lots, foretelling events, &c. 275—several names of, ib.—an ingredient in the purifying cauldron, 276
 Vessel with the iron door, 120
 Viaticum of Llevoed, a moral poem, 83
 Vices of the gods, 254
 Victims, when slain, 171
 Vindication of the bards, 3
 Vipers, 19—symbolical, 544
 Vortigern, 329—treachery of, 335, &c. 341—deposed and re-elected, 341—parricide and usurpation of, 342—over-rules the British council, 361—character and death of, 373—elegy upon the death of, 380
 Vortimer, elegy upon the death of, 336—battles of, 357, &c.
 W
 Wand of the bards, 206
 Wandering island, 155
 War deemed lawful by the druids, 61—of the splendid mover, a sacred song, 510—war song of the Britons, 374—warriors praised by Taliesin, 62
 Warburton's account of the mysteries, 254
 Water of inspiration, 40, 185, 213, 214—of immortality, 227, 228—of the cauldron, why poisonous, 220—of purification, 250—water-dweller, Hengist, 328
 Weapon not to be held naked in the presence of a bard, 60
 Wear of Gwyddno, 238, 248
 Web of heroism, a magical standard, 583
 Well in the sacred cell, 394, 395
 Welsh, not wholly converted to Christianity in the sixth century, 282—princes patronized the bards, 25—tolerated druidism, 282
 Wheel on the British coins, 602—a symbol of Arlanrod, 603, 606
 White robes of the druids, 23—dogs, 546
 Wild boars hunted by Hengist, 382
 Wind of purposes? 53
 Wolf of mythology, 434—of Merddin, 485
 Woman composed of flowers, 264
 Wonderful supreme ruler, a sacred title, 287
 World, an animal, 46, 47—ascending from the deep, 47—the arkite family, 207
 Wort contributed for the festival, 273
 Wren, a transformation of the aspirant, 235
 Writings, druidical, 511
 Y
 Y Ddinas, in Snowdon, described, 435
 Y Meinen Hirion, temple of Ceres, 300
 Ych Brych, 133, 523
 Ychen, Banawg, 128—originally three, 139—Dewi, 140
 Yellow ox of the spring, 132

- Ynys Pybyrddor, 519
 Yoke of the sacred oxen, 129—of Hu,
 137—of gold, 463—of the arkite god,
 560
 Ys Colan contends with Merddin, 471—burns British books, 472
 Ysgrifen Brydain, 510
- Yssadawr, the consumer, 121—
 Ystre, the course, at Stonehenge, 385
 Ystwyth, the Styx of the druids, 251
 Z
 Zodiac represented by the druidical temples, 293, &c.
 Zones of the earth, 53

ERRATA.

Owing to the Author's distance from the Press, and the defect of his vision, some errors have escaped, notwithstanding the care of the Printer. The following affect the sense.

page	line	for	read
7	6	huz biduvydd	hwy bieuvydd
7	8	Dernctia	Demetia
33	13	Area	Æra
68	13	Twedor	Tewdor
76	14	is	its
85	8	expiate	expatiate
103	10	gwastradth	gwastraeth
103	21	beddirwedd	bedeirwedd
116	22	little	title
131	26	Tentones	Teutones
134	17	Taw	Tarw
135	23	Bollona	Bellona
139	12	profession	procession
140	7	Britains	Britons
156	21	flour	flower
198	21	populace	populous
221	16	εμενοφορησα	εμεροφορησα
265	3	farmer	farner
275	13	Gravny	Grawn y
275	14	Borues	Berries
390	13	opic	topic
460	2	from the bottom, Briton	Britain
472	14	illusion	allusion
544	26	harnspex	haruspex
549	17	weapon	weapons
573	8	eiddaw	eidduw
582	19	anoothwe	anorthwe
586	20	ddogyn	dhogyn
597	31	complete	complex

DIRECTIONS TO THE BINDER.

The Plate to be placed at the end of the Work:

INDEX

TO

CELTIC RESEARCHES.

A.

A, natural expression of that vocal power 408
 Ab, hab, av, hav, primitives, 474
 Abaris, a Druid, 184—his country ascertained from ancient writers, 189
 Ac, ach, primitives, 480
 Ad, adh, had, hadh, primitives, 487
 Aedh, the Dis of the ancient Gauls, 167
 Af, haf, primitives, 517
 Ag, Hag, primitives, 496
 Al, hal, primitives, 500
 Alphabet of the Bards, 254—the same as the Etruscan, 271—upon what principles founded, 278—how copied from nature, 328
 Alphabets of trees, acknowledged by the Arabians, Hebrews and Chaldeans, 305, &c.—inferred from metaphors, 306
 Alphabets of the nations sprung from one origin, 335
 Am, ham, primitives, 506
 An, han, primitives, 512
 Analogy between the Bardic and Greek letters, 329
 Annwn, the deep, or lower regions, 175
 Antediluvian, astronomy and chronology, 21, 28
 Antediluvians, their advantages in the acquisition of experience, 9
 Ap, hap, primitives, 517
 Apollo, worshipped in Britain, 190
 Ar, har, primitives, 524
 Armorican language, related to the Welsh and Cornish, 220—its dialectical difference from the Welsh existed in the age of Cæsar, 221—a test of Celtic dialects, 222
 Articulate sounds have their appropriate force in expressing ideas, 364
 Arts cultivated by the Antediluvians, 9
 As, has, primitives, 531
 At, hat, primitives, 537
 Authority and subordination essential to civil society, 46
 Authority, patriarchal, 48

B.

B, natural expression of that articulate power, 441
 Ba, Va—primitives, 475
 Babylonians, visited Stonehenge, 196
 Bards, Ancient British, 245—disciples of the Druids, 246—profess druidism, 152, 309—preserve druidical tradition, 152, 270
 Be, ve, primitives, 476
 Belgæ of Britain, whence, 208, &c.—Celtæ, for the most part, 229
 Bi, vi, primitives, 478
 Boreadæ, name of the Druids, 189
 Britain, probably colonized by a patriarch, who was born in the first postdiluvian century; that is, about 500 years after the deluge, or in the age of Abraham, 104, &c.—the early history of, an important study, 117
 Britons, from Armorica, 167—traded with Spain in their own vessels, 228
 Bryant, objections to his opinion of the aggrandisement of Nimrod's party, and of the house of Ham, 115
 Bu, vu, primitives, 480

C

C, natural expression of that articulate power, 443
 Ca, primitive, 482
 Cad Goddeu, a mystical poem, 258
 Cadmus, a Carian, 317—his letters, ib. &c.
 Ce, che, primitives, 483
 Celtæ, state of society amongst them, 118—Noachidæ, 121—primitive inhabitants of great part of Europe, 122—descendants of Gomer, 123—and, probably, of Ashkenaz, 127—the Hyperboreans of early authors, 176—two principal branches of, 211
 Celtic language, distinguished from the Gothic, 215—essential to druidism, 218—fixed and established by druidism, 223—preserved in Armorica to

- the close of the fourth century, and probably to this day, 219, &c.—dialects and character of, 224—remains of a peculiar dialect of, 213—general characteristics of, 234—simplicity of its primitives, 256
- Chaldeans, who they were, 66, 80—succeeded the subjects of Nimrod in Babylonia, 75
- Changes in the elementary sounds of language, 393, &c.
- Characteristics of primitive language, 386
- Chinese characters, 338
- Chronology, vindication of the Hebrew, 61
- Ci, chi, primitives, 484
- Cimmerii, Celtæ, their ancient territory, 135—ancient inhabitants of Thrace, 144
- Civil arts of the first ages, transmitted to the Noachidæ, 18
- Civil life cultivated in the first age, 8
- Classification of consonant powers, 396
- Co, cho, primitives, 485
- Coelbreni, bardic lots, or letters, 270
- Colonies which settled in ancient Britain, 153, &c.
- Confusion of tongues, its probable æra, 79
- Connection between primitive letters and hieroglyphics, 340
- Consonants, examples of their natural expression, 365, 440—classes of, 396—table of mutations, 402
- Coranied, Coritani, Corii, Coitani, ancient colonists of Britain, 200, 201—a Belgic race, 202, 208, &c.—came from the neighbourhood of the Rhine, 204—spoke a language similar to the Irish, 203.
- Cu, primitive, 487
- Cymry, ancient Britons, came from Thrace or Thessaly, 165
- D
- D, natural expression of that articulate power, 445
- Da, primitive, 488
- De, primitive, 490
- Deluge, local and national traditions of it, from the Noachidæ, 107—British traditions of it, 157
- Di, primitive, 491
- Dialects, why various, 353—their origin, 385
- Diluvian patriarch, his various titles in British tradition, 163
- Divination by rods, 293
- Do, primitive, 492
- Druids, their rank, studies and office, 119—
—their name extended only to Gaul and Britain, originally pertained to the latter, 139—Celtæ, and not strangers, 140, 147—the grounds of their system co-eval with the Celtic nation, 147—retained some principles of the patriarchal religion, 119—their similarity to the Magi, Brachmans, &c. 120—this similarity derived from the parent stock, 121, 149—celebrated the mysteries of the dead, 142, 187—acknowledged one God, 120—See this opinion qualified, Myth. and Rites of the British Druids. Sect. 2.—retired into Mona, from the Romans, 141—not inventors of arts, but preservers of ancient lore, 150—how to be estimated in a political view, 172—summary of their system, 185
- Druids acquainted with letters, 238, 242—
—preserved an alphabet, 233, 309—similar to the Orphic priests, 326
- Druidical alphabet referred, by tradition, to the age of the deluge, 287
- Druidism, traditional founders of, 160—its original design, 170—corrupted before the age of Cæsar, 171—preserved in Armorica, 218—not originating from the Phœnicians, 229—lingered in Gaul to the sixth century, and in Britain to the reign of Canute, 151
- Du, primitive, 493
- E
- E, natural expression of that vocal power, 414
- Eb, heb, ev, hev, primitives, 476
- Ec, ech, primitives, 482
- Ed, edh, hed, hedh, primitives, 489
- Eg, heg, primitives, 495
- El, hel, primitives, 501
- Em, hem, primitives, 508
- En, hen, primitives, 513
- Ep, hep, ef, hef, primitives, 519
- Equality of condition, not recognized by the primitive ages, 46, 48
- Er, her, primitives, 526
- Es, hes, primitives, 532
- Et, lct, primitives, 539
- F
- F, derivative of P, its natural expression, 462
- Formation of language, 373, &c.
- G
- G, natural expression of, 448
- Ga, primitive, 494—Ge, primitive, 496

Gentilism, whence it arose, 85
 Geography of the primitive ages, 29, 31, 33
 Gesture connected with articulation, 366
 Gi, primitive, 497
 Giants, how described by ancient tradition, 80
 Go, primitive, 498
 Gomer, the nations that sprung from his three sons, 125
 Gorwynion, a mystical poem, 249
 Goths, some hints on the subject of, 133, &c.
 Gu, primitive, 499
 Gwydion ab Don, the British Hermes, 168, 174
 Gwyn ab Nudd, the British Pluto, 174

H

Hebrew, whether the primitive language, 89—why a sacred language, 93—not the general language of the children of Heber, nor peculiar to his family, 96—spoken by the Canaanites, 97, 100—the principal dialect of the primitive language, 101, &c.
 Hercules, mythological tales which bring him into contact with the Celtæ, 193
 Hewys, a mythological character, 196
 Hieroglyphics partook of the nature of letters, 339
 Hu, the traditional patriarch and conductor of the cymry, 154, 158—the first husbandman, 158—the god of the Druids, 163—identified with the patriarch Noah, and the sun, 164—oxen of, 157
 Hyperboreans of the early authors, Celtæ, 178—not Scythians, nor inhabitants of the north-east, 179—dwelt in the north-west, 180—Britain, chief seat of, 181, 188—the same as the Druids, 181, 549—traditions, which are referred to them, preserved in Britain, 554
 Hyperborean temple of Apollo visited by the Babylonians, 196

I

I, natural expression of that vocal power, 421
 Ib, hib, iv, hiv, primitives, 477
 Ic, ich, primitives, 483
 Id, primitive, 490
 Idris, a mythological character, 161, 173
 Ig, hig, primitives, 496
 Ii, hil, primitives, 502
 Im, hin, primitives, 503
 In, hin, primitives, 514
 Indian tradition of the Noachidæ, 197.

it appears that this tale has been corrupted and interpolated, q. what is its real state in the ancient books?
 Ip, hip, if, hif, primitives, 520
 Ir, hir, primitives, 522
 Irish names of places, in Rhætia and Vindelicia, 207
 Irish language allied to Asiatic dialects, but radically Celtic, 224—the dialect of the ancient Belgæ, 229—a chief dialect of the Celtic, 231—its defects, 232—its excellencies, 233
 Irish letters, 274, &c.—names of, similar to those of the Hebrew letters, 333
 Is, his, primitives, 533
 It, hit, primitives, 540

L

L, natural expression of, 449
 La, primitive, 500
 Language, vestiges of the primitive, 88—whether the Hebrew be the primitive, 89—first principles of, founded in nature, 367—opinions relative to the first principles of, 373—Mosaic account of its origin, 374—nature of the first rudiments of, 376, &c.
 Languages of Savages, no test of the primitive, 103—of the Noachidæ, dialects of the primitive, 386
 Le, primitive, 502
 Letters, whether known to the Celtæ, 237—of the Druids, resembled the Greek, 240—of the Hyperboreans, 241—of the Turditani, 241—not Phœnician, 242—of the Bards, distinguished by primitive Celtic names, 273
 Letters bardic, with their appropriate names and symbols, 277—compared with the Runic, 311—bardic and Runic from the same origin, 314—bardic, compared with the Greek and Roman, 315, &c.—of Cadmus, 317—Irish, preserve the names of the symbolical trees, 274—Greek, their names, 321—number of radical, in old alphabets, 322—names of the Roman, probably, Pelasgic, significant in the Celtic, 323—of the ancient Gauls, 327—Hebrew, their names, 332—Asiatic, sketches of natural or artificial objects, 332—Irish, their names similar to the Hebrew, yet native terms, 333—originally hieroglyphical, 339—ancient method of using, 301
 Li, primitive, 503—Lo, primitive, 504
 Lots of the Bards, 246—of the Germans, 281
 Lu, primitive, 505

M

- M, natural expression of, 452
 Ma, primitive, 506
 Man, his original state, 3—ascertained by the sacred scriptures, 6—from the beginning, a social and rational creature, 7—in the first age, exercised the arts of civil life, and enjoyed property, 8
 Magic of the Druids, 161
 Math, the Metis of antiquity, 285
 Me, primitive, 508
 Menw of the Britons, the patriarch Noah, 197
 Mi, primitive, 509
 Misseltoe of the oak, sacred to Proserpine, 144
 Mo, primitive, 510
 Monuments of druidical superstition, 146, 160—constructed upon astronomical principles, 192—pertained chiefly to the Aborigines, 202
 Moral law, known to the primitive world, 15
 Mu, primitive, 511
 Mutations of consonants, 402—of vocal and articulate sounds in the Celtic dialects, 403
 Mystical rites, their origin, and mischievous consequences, 109, 112, &c.
 Mythological tale of the Armoricans, 558
 Mythology of Britain connected with that of Greece, 176

N

- N, natural expression of, 456
 Na, primitive, 512
 Natural expression of articulate sounds, 347, &c.—taught by the Bards, and recognized by several ancient nations, 348, &c.—objections to, 350—answered, 352—a subject of general perception, 362—acknowledged by ancient and modern writers, 370—a principle necessary to the formation of language, 371—exemplified in consonant powers, 365—exemplified in the vowels, 408, &c.
 Natural history of the Antediluvians, 19
 Natural state of man, 357
 Ne, primitive, 514—Ni, primitive, 515
 Nimrod, his kingdom not universal, 32, 55,—his rebellion and apostacy, 54—his subjects comprised individuals of divers families, 59—not the founder of the Assyrian empire, 63—his kingdom early overthrown, and succeeded by that of Elam, 76

- No, primitive, 516
 Noachidæ profited by the experience of the Antediluvians, 10—their wisdom venerated in the age of Job, and developed in his book, 11—their patrimony assigned to them in the age of Noah, 32—and by lot, 33—early separation of, ordered by a wise decree, 51—evils that must have resulted from their continuing under one government, 53—settle in their respective portions, 104—state of society, in the new colonies of, 106—carried the institutions of the patriarch into their respective patrimonies, 106—degeneracy of their descendants accounted for, 113
 Noah and his descendants preserved the discoveries of the first ages, 50
 Nu, primitive, 517

O

- O, natural expression of, 424
 Ob, hob, ov, hov, primitives, 478
 Oc, och, primitives, 485
 Od, odh, hod, primitives, 491
 Og, hog, primitives, 497
 Ogygia, whether it meant Ireland? 206
 Ol, hol, primitives, 503—Om, hom, primitives, 509
 On, hon, primitives, 515—Op, hop, of, hof, primitives, 521
 Or, hor, primitives, 529
 Original language, Egyptian experiment for its discovery, 369
 Original terms, of what class? 380
 Orphic rites prevalent amongst the Cimmerii, 145
 Os, hos, oz, primitives, 534—Ot, hot, primitives, 541

P

- P, natural expression of, 459
 Pa, fa, primitives, 518
 Patriarchal authority, 48
 Pe, fe, primitives, 519
 Pelasgi, 244
 Pelasgic letters, 315—the same as the bardic, 325—first published by the Thracian Bards, 327
 Philosophers atheistical, regarded man as originally a savage, 3—modern, adopt their hypothesis, 5—religious, acknowledged the original dignity of human nature, 4
 Phœnicians left no considerable colonies in the British Islands, 226
 Pi, fi, primitives, 521

Plenydd, a title of the sun, 170
 Po, fo, primitives, 522
 Power, civil, its exercise lawful: its abuse unlawful, 49
 Primitive language, its general character, 373, &c.—its characteristics, 386—how far preserved, 389—its progressive stages, 384, &c.
 Primitive vowels, 392
 Primitive words, examples, 367
 Progress of language, 390
 Property, its nature ascertained in the first age, 8
 Prydain, a title of the sun, 169
 Pu, fu, primitives, 524

R

R, natural expression of, 463
 Ra, rha, primitives, 525
 Re, rhe, primitives, 527
 Religion of the primitive ages, 14—retained in some districts to the age of Abraham, 57
 Reliques of Druidism, preserved in the Welsh language, 222
 Ri, rhi, primitives, 529
 Rights of man, modern doctrine of, founded in Atheism, 46
 Ro, rho, primitives, 530
 Rod and staff, symbolical, 291, &c.
 Rods of priests and other officers, 291—abused by the heathens, 292—joined, in making covenants, 295—broken, in dissolving covenants, 296—used mystically by Jacob, 303
 Ru, rhu, primitives, 530
 Runic characters, 311, &c.

S

S, natural expression of, 466
 Sa, primitive, 531
 Sacrifice instituted in the first age, 16
 Sanchoniathon's Phœnician traditions, 109
 Saronides, what they were, 161
 Saturn, his character allusive to Noah, 148
 Satyavrata, 77
 Savage life, its origin accounted for, 84—diffused into various regions, by the fugitives from Babel, 106—not the natural state of man, 357
 Scythæ, not powerful in Europe, till the sixth century before Christ, 139
 Se, ze, primitives, 532
 Shepherd kings of Egypt, 77
 Si, primitive, 534
 Simplicity of the primitive language, 376, &c.

So, primitive, 535
 Society primitive, civil, not savage, 46, 50
 Sounds naturally expressive, 256, 348, 360
 State of nature, scriptural account of it, 10—distinguished from the savage state, 357, &c.
 Story of two savages, 358
 Su, primitive, 536
 Sui, priests of the Penates, in Samothrace, 140
 Symbolical sprigs employed, to express the elements of language, 162, 246, &c.—modern remains of their use, 252—arranged and confined by knots, 253—adapted to the formation of an alphabet, 254—uttered distinct sounds, 263—read by those who delivered books, 266—derived from an ancient and general system, 289—the basis of the Runic characters, 313—their system comparatively simple, 334
 Symbolical trees known to Adam, Noah, Jacob, and the Jews, 289, &c.
 Syw, an appellative of a Druid, 139

T

T, natural expression of, 469
 Ta, primitive, 538
 Taliesin, a Druid, 246
 Te, primitive, 540
 Ti, primitive, 541
 Tithes prior to the Levitical law, 17
 To, primitive, 542
 Tradition, the only ancient history of Greece and Rome, 2—superseded by philosophical speculation, 3—of the primitive ages, appropriated by different nations, 108, 112
 Traditions of the Druids, 147—of the deluge, locally appropriated, 162
 Trees sacred to particular gods, 299—symbolical, 296, &c.
 Triads of the Druids, recorded by ancient authors, 150—Welsh, contain druidical tradition, 152—specimens of the Welsh, 153—ænigmatical and mythological, 162, 163
 Tu, primitive, 143
 Tydain Tad Awen, the solar divinity, 159, 169

U

U, natural expression of, 431
 Ub, hub, uv, huv, primitives, 480
 Uc, uch, primitives, 486
 Ud, hud, primitives, 492

Vegetation gradually recovered after the deluge, 30
 Ug, hug, primitives, 493
 Ul, hul, primitives, 505
 Um, hum, primitives, 511
 Un, hun, primitives, 516
 Vowels primitive, 391, &c.—mutations of, 394, 396
 Up, hup, uf, huf, primitives, 523
 Ur, hur, primitives, 530
 Us, hus, primitives, 536
 Ut, hut, primitives, 543

W

Waldensic language, 225
 Welsh, its importance in Celtic literature, 222
 Writing, antiquity of the art of, 34, 45—older than the tables of the decalogue, 35, &c.—known to the Noachidæ, and probably to the antediluvians, 37
 Writings of the primitive ages, probably, quoted by Moses, 39

Y

Year of the primitive ages, 22, &c.

END OF INDEX TO CELTIC RESEARCHES.

Boston Public Library
Central Library, Copley Square

Division of Reference and Research Services

The Date Due Card in the pocket indicates the date on or before which this book should be returned to the Library.

Please do not remove cards from this pocket.

APR 2 1926

